Anyone remotely involved with the Model Hobby Industry will see the emphasis on the license-free "72 MHz" channels from ready-built remote control radios. With 80 channels to choose from it is NOT a problem at any event or weekend gathering of modelers
together in one location.

Then that unit is bound to be affected by "legal" ham transmissions
(AS IF interference with others is "legal") causing loss of control.

Olde-tymers (causing such interference) will claim they have a "right" to do it. They "own" the band or something like that. :-( Feel free to "correct me." :-) The olde-tymers try to do that a LOT in here... :-)

The dam recreation area in the L.A. San Fernando Valley has a very large turn-out most every weekend here. At Apollo Field
there can be (easy) 50 R-C flyers there. [it is the major location for flying in the huge Los Angeles area] MOST R-C flyers are a considerate bunch and TRY to avoid interference. But, not all R-C units are frequency-mobile. The emphasis is on the MODELS not the radios...the FLYING (for model aircraft) rather than the "operating."

I started working in 1948 at Testor Chemical Company, working IN the model shop as a flunky doing the plan illustration. I've followed the Model Hobby Industry somewhat ever since. I don't claim "inside knowledge" on the R-C radios, only that I got interested in radios and electronics while seeing what the very first R-C planes could do with rudder-only control. [we are talking the Raytheon RK61 single-tube gas-filled tube regen
receivers here <smile> with quite primitive mechanical control systems] Bang-bang control (full one way or the other, single neutral center), not the PWM proportional systems of today
and two decades ago using single- and double-conversion solid-
state receivers with (now) standardized control-stick transmitter boxes containing microprocessors.

R-C has gotten rather sophisticated since its beginning. Last year had the first successful cross-Atlantic flight of a model aircraft, R-C for takeoff and landing with GPS-assisted mid-course control. One helluva good accomplishment for nonprofessional modelers! I think the website for that has been taken down but anyone can read about it in MAN or the two other newsstand magazines targeting R-C modeling.

Some radio amateurs are still trying to promote radiotelegraphy
AS IF this were still 1901 with Marconi getting his S in Newfoundland. :-)

They think one MUST do the "CW" thing even if using a multi-conversion, DSP-enhanced, digitial-synthesis frequency control
solid-state transceiver (using microprocessor assistance), ready-built off-the-shelf plug-and-play. All to bang the carrier

Blowcode is just a newsgroup junkie, getting off on thinking she is anonymous. He should get back on the bus where he can remark on "women of color" and brag about his collitch degree (soma cum loud) where she could "get any job in human resources she wanted." :-)

Sound familiar, Brian? :-)

Blowcode's phrases are 40 to 50 years out of date, but right out of the ARRL's morsemen manual circa 1950. That is her maximum involvement with radio communications of any kind.
Another FRAUD taking out her everyday frustrations by mean-mouthing everyone, fomenting 'problems' where there are no problems, trying trying trying to whip up devisiveness across four newsgroups at the same time. Disgusting little petty exercise, a true computer-modem comms pervert's action.

But, as with anyone favoring radiotelegraphy, Blowcode is perfectly all right with the resident morsemen in here, those with the amateur extra classes who want to keep the code test forever and ever. [see the 1x2 callsigns of N2EY, K8MN, and K4YZ et al as examples]

They should all go back to their dreaming of fame and glory using "CW" to save lives...just like the fiction paperbacks sold by the ARRL promise. Fantasy time for them. Escape.
Delusion of glory via "CW." Pseudo-strength, like some kind of imagination on mental steroids. And, like overdosing on such mental steroids, losing their capability of rationality.
Sickness but they are unaware of their sickness.

Military Imposter Robeson is one sick puppy. We can't expect him to improve his demeanor by himself. He is personally angry and frustrated, searching for something, anything in regards to personal "glory" via some kind of rank.

There's been NO real input on hams saving lives by "CW" lately.
"Lately" being in the last few decades. The best the pro-coders can come up with is some small-displacement ship going down somewhere in the UK territory on New Year's Eve...NOT doing the "CW" comms thing ON ham bands.

The US military has kept the CW setting on front panel controls for years...but NOT for radiotelegraphy purposes. That is for remoting the operation of transmitters, almost always by wireline control. Land forces learned many decades ago to locate transmitters well away from Hq troops.

Pro-coders will see such front panel control settings and immediately jump on their pro-code bandwagon shouting about
"the military using radiotelegraphy" when they don't know squat about real field use of land force radios or the peripheral equipment for same.

Army field radio was already dropping radiotelegraphy comms
DURING the active phase of the Korean War (i.e., prior to 1953).
Some of it was used in southeast Asia in the following decade.

Problem is, olde-tymers are still brainwashed by glorious propaganda (from the boys in Newington) about World War II and (conveniently) forget that war ended 61 years ago. They still have dreams of glory and honor using "CW" and get angry when they are awakened to the reality of today.

Sigh...well they've "denied" doing so, keep asking "where did I [they] write such words?" They didn't say so outright but the INTENT was plain as day at noontime.

These pro-coder olde-tymers just do NOT want that code test to ever disappear. If it did they would lose their major Bragging Right (to glory and honor of telegraphic modes).

Anyone remotely involved with the Model Hobby Industry will see the emphasis on the license-free "72 MHz" channels from ready-
built remote control radios. With 80 channels to choose from it is NOT a problem at any event or weekend gathering of modelers
together in one location.

Then that unit is bound to be affected by "legal" ham transmissions
(AS IF interference with others is "legal") causing loss of control.

Olde-tymers (causing such interference) will claim they have a "right" to do it. They "own" the band or something like that. :-( Feel free to "correct me." :-) The olde-tymers try to do

that a LOT in here... :-)

The dam recreation area in the L.A. San Fernando Valley has a very large turn-out most every weekend here. At Apollo Field
there can be (easy) 50 R-C flyers there. [it is the major location
for flying in the huge Los Angeles area] MOST R-C flyers are a considerate bunch and TRY to avoid interference. But, not all R-C units are frequency-mobile. The emphasis is on the MODELS not the radios...the FLYING (for model aircraft) rather than the "operating."

I started working in 1948 at Testor Chemical Company, working
IN the model shop as a flunky doing the plan illustration. I've followed the Model Hobby Industry somewhat ever since. I don't claim "inside knowledge" on the R-C radios, only that I got interested in radios and electronics while seeing what the very first R-C planes could do with rudder-only control. [we are talking the Raytheon RK61 single-tube gas-filled tube regen
receivers here <smile> with quite primitive mechanical control systems] Bang-bang control (full one way or the other, single neutral center), not the PWM proportional systems of today
and two decades ago using single- and double-conversion solid-
state receivers with (now) standardized control-stick transmitter
boxes containing microprocessors.

R-C has gotten rather sophisticated since its beginning. Last year had the first successful cross-Atlantic flight of a model aircraft, R-C for takeoff and landing with GPS-assisted mid-course control. One helluva good accomplishment for nonprofessional modelers! I think the website for that has been taken down but anyone can read about it in MAN or the two other newsstand magazines targeting R-C modeling.

Some radio amateurs are still trying to promote radiotelegraphy
Newfoundland. :-)

They think one MUST do the "CW" thing even if using a multi-conversion, DSP-enhanced, digitial-synthesis frequency control
solid-state transceiver (using microprocessor assistance),
ready-built off-the-shelf plug-and-play. All to bang the carrier

1906 thinking in 2006. Ptui.

You would like to think that, but without efforts from folks like Carl, Bill, Len, hans, myself and others, you would still be repeating such myths, and would never make statements such as "Not all CW signals are good."

You can thank us, but that's probably not very likely.

Because of the efforts made to dismiss countless Morse Myths over the years, you were just now able to state that not all CW signals are good without 1x2 PCTAs pooh poohing such talk.

that they try but it is secondary the abilty of the RC gruop is largely depneant In my expernce on just how the local frequecny coordinators are able to get people on to lots of freqs in fringe area where the shop are feww and large college is around somed ay you do have 50 plane trying to operate on 4 or 5 frq in larger area the hobby shop and tend in placing orders for stuff to spread the new folks around an advantage yYOU get in your area or would around SF but out between hobby shop things get weird (right now trying to duck being given the job of trying to coordinate the freqs round here Indeed I often spend a lot helping recrytal and tune the units

Dees coming around in her own way, but the brainwashing that she's undergone is strong. Perhaps in another decade... if there's still an amateur radio. If only she had been able to think spontaneously and resist, the brainwashing wouldn't have been so well received.

Based on actually trying it. I did not form an opinion on it until I gave it a thorough workout. And if the conditions are good enough and they are going too fast for me, I'll use it to help out. But there's a lot of times it simply doesn't do the job.

Correction: almost any operator who works code on a semi-regular basis. My code skills are very modest. Typically I am comfortable at 13wpm to 15wpm. Higher than that is a real strain. Still I often copy better than the computer despite that.

No I would not be repeating that myth because I never, ever said that all CW signals are good and never subscribed to that philosophy. If they were the machines would always work and they don't. The other half of the coin is that some of the anti-code types persist in the myth that "Code can always be copied by computer". Neither myth is true.

I've always maintained that every mode has its advantages and disadvantages. A good ham attempts to be conversant with those abilities. However the extremists on both sides don't want to hear that.

Nope because you are ascribing things to me that are not true. Nobody has changed my opinions as stated in the above paragraphs. You make the mistake of lumping everyone who favors code into one group. That is no more accurate than lumping the anti-code people all in one group.

I do not dismiss the software but am realistic to know that it is not the panacea that some would like to believe. Sometimes it works and sometimes it fails.

Depends on the conditions. One can construct scenarios where whatever mode they favor is the "best". Any one striving to be a knowledgeable ham should be converstant with those scenarios. If you need an image, SST or fax are far better modes than CW. The "best" mode depends on the purpose of the communication and the conditions under which that communication must be sent.

You are exaggerating. None have stated all CW signals are good. What they have contended is that it is possible to copy a poor CW signal under conditions where you could not copy other types of signals.

Back just before 5 wpm code went into effect, a bunch of hams upgraded just so they could say their license wasn't a welfare license. Heee Heee.

I wonder if no-codes will make a mad rush to pass the code element this time just so they can say they're a Code tested ham, or are welfare license more acceptable these days?

I'm amazed at how well Len is still able to type after all the strokes he's had over the years that have left him 92% brain dead. The strokes might also explain why Lens posts are pretty much lines and lines of gas and no substance.

5wpm ain't really learning it. I can fart 5 wpm.

Lets kick the requirement up there to between 13 and 20 wpm for all classes. And no-codes that haven't passed it after a year get booted which will help clean up the repeaters.

Because I'm still probably in everyone killfile from seven or eight years ago. ROFL.

That,

and I don't want KB9RQZ to send me gay sex IM's like he does with Lloyd Davies, Mark Foley, and Roger Wiseman.

You are mistaken. I've always been one to think spontaneously. Since I have personally experienced conditions where it had to be CW or turn off the radio, I advocate all hams knowing code at a basic level. To insure that they do learn it at a basic level, testing at some point in the licensing is appropriate. Before entering these news I'd never heard much discussion either way on code. My opinions on its usefulness and desireability were formed based entirely on actual operating experience. I was surprised to learn that there was a big discussion on it in the amateur community.

I do NOT and never have believed in the arguments about "keeping out the riffraff", maintaining tradition, or the "I had to so you should to".

It's basic knowledge, pure and simple. Most of the people I know don't use any of the theory either but it is part of the basic knowledge set. I've used ohm's law only a couple of times in the 14 years I've been licensed. I've used the dipole equation half a dozen times. I've never used smith charts. One could get by without the theory but having learned it, I can choose where I want to focus my attention in amateur ration.

Actually, I have held an advanced class ticket for more than 30 years.

I took my test at 1919 M Street, NW? Washington, DC. Under the watchful eye of an FCC examiner. My code test came off of an old signal corps paper tape driven code practice machine. The key they gave me to use was from the same set.

My receiving speed was somewhere around 40wpm, and my sending sucks rope.
I never could master an Iambic keyer.

no backhand slight was made I have no idea is chris is adrug user no reason to say he is and none to say he is not Indeed I don't care if he is adrug user

you are both ful of lies and distortions

Chris. Morgan wants to know if you have a "slicense".

"I have no idea if Chris is on drugs or if chris has slicense"

Ignore his back-handed slight about the drugs. He simply has "no idea". Mark is still smarting over the fact that you called Mark out on Mark's claim to be a geophysicist.

Exposure can be very embarrassing to the braggart...

Ok, I am a traditionalist, sorry.

5wpm should not be an impediment to anyone with normal faculties and normal physical dexterity.
I could do 5 wpm at 7 or 8 and I did not know a ham operator...my dad taught me after he came home from Army as Radio op. Never used it for 15 or so years.

At 25 I took a novice class (finally) and was doing over 20wpm in 2-3 weeks.

For anything above the entry license, a code increase would be warranted to operate in the best cw bands, maybe.

When I took my General, Advanced, and Extra I had to do it at the FCC office and took and sent code from the Director, Detroit office. Talk about nervous!
I dont think you can compare the V.E.C. experience (as good a job as they do) with that for excitement and stress.
When you came out of the MCNamara Bldg in Detroit, you knew you had taken a test. You knew you had earned your ticket!

No, I would not stay on C.B.......as good a service as it is, it cannot compare with the people of Ham Radio.

Gay Bashing? Gay Bashing? I didn't see any gay bashing, Mark. I DID see a question mark behind "homobrew". How is that gay bashing? Are you overly sensitive about your admitted bisexual proclivities?
Please cease putting words in the mouths of others, Mark. I will not allow that to pass.
Oh, and does it irk you if I enjoy "topsotting"? Is that gay bashing, too?
The British use the term sot to describe a drunkard. As an offensive term for one who drinks habitually, (drunkard).
If I "topsot", am I picking on Brits? Those who imbibe?

And just WHO is the controlling authority on whether I top post or not? YOU?
<derisive laughter>

You don't count, Mark.

Is there some reason anyone should care, pseudo-Mark? Blatant homophobia isn't as cool outside KKK circles as you seem to think. If you don't like sexuality shoved in your face, refrain from public displays of affection first. Of course, you probably don't have a choice, meaning you're motivated by jealousy, but I'm giving you a tiny benefit of the doubt.

I believe that's called "transference". Bigotry, after all, is rife in rec.radio.*, and is also a common kooksign roughly 80-90% of the time. The rest of the time, of course, paranoia about bigotry is the kooksign...

no backhand slight was made I have no idea is chris is adrug user no reason to say he is and none to say he is not Indeed I don't care if he is adrug user

You, Mark, are a goon. If you truly do not care whether or not Chris has a license, then why the comment? Apparently you do care or you'd have not brought it up to begin with.
As far as Chris using drugs? If you have no reason to say he is or is not a drug user, why mention it to begin with? Perhaps it was just an easy shot across his bow, eh? A cheap, tawdry shot at that.
It would seem to me, Mark, that the lies are yours. You insinuate that Chris has no license and may be a drug abuser. You did not accuse, but you insinutated as much.

I tell no lies. Unlike you, I have no reason to distort the comments of others or to place words in the mouths of posters that were never uttered. I will, however, continue to take YOU to task for your distortions, misreprentations and outright lies, and I will do so on a regular basis.

You are not an honorable person, Mark Morgan. You are not an intellectual person, Mark Morgan. You are a poor, little adult waif with nothing in his life but Usenet. Nothing more, nothing less.

I feel sorry for you.

Sure do. This newsgroup isn't all of amateur radio, though. In fact,
it's a very small group.

You mean like olde-tymers who want the zoning in their neighborhood to stay the same forever? There's at least one of those "in this newsgroup".

That doesn't answer my question at all, Len.

Why are the modes used or not used by other radio services important
to
the license test requirements for an amateur radio license?

Shouldn't the modes used by radio amateurs be most important to the license test requirements for an amateur radio license?

> The FCC does NOT mandate exclusive use of radiotelegraphy
> by US radio amateurs. All allocated modes are OPTIONAL > to use. If all allocated modes are OPTIONAL to use, > why continue a specific pass-fail TEST in ONE MODE?

Because that mode is a big part of amateur radio operation, and skill in the use of that mode cannot be adequately tested otherwise. And because there needs to be some testing on the things an Amateur Radio license authorizes licensees to do.

What you're saying, once all the bluster is removed, is that since hams are not required to use Morse Code, they should not be required to learn Morse Code.

The problem is that if the same idea is applied to other modes, most of the rest of the license requirements go away.

For example:

The FCC does not require exclusive use of radiotelephone modes by US radio amateurs. Those modes are all optional to use. Why should there be any questions on radiotelephone modes on the tests for an amateur radio license?

The FCC does not require exclusive use of data modes by US radio amateurs. Those modes are all optional to use. Why should there be any questions on data modes on the tests for an amateur radio license?

The FCC does not require exclusive use of VHF bands by US radio amateurs. Choice of band is entirely optional. Why should there be any questions on VHF on the tests for an amateur radio license?

Etc.

Go down that path for any distance and there's almost nothing left of the written test. Is that what you want? I think it is.

Oh, come on. Admit that you're obsessed with Mark and want him to suck you off, Wabbit. I think, in fact, all the repressed gays of rec.radio.*
should accept themselves as gay.

This code argument really gets old. I passed the General 13WPM code. Bidg deal. Yeah, I like to use CW, but do I think people need to be tested on CW? Heck NO! Let's end this antiquated test. It's a modern era. If you want to learn it -fine, but don't push your old and outdated beliefs on anyone else.

As someone that entered the hobby as a no-code tech and upgraded to extra within a year, I feel I've earned the right to gripe. I did element 1C at 20WPM. This 5WPM thing irks me.

Of course I haven't used a radio in a few years now. Restrictions on antennas and the fact that 2m, 70cm and up are nothing but packet trackers these days.

Perhaps it would put a different perspective on things if you read up on the early history of ham radio. The earliest testing for CW was only 5wpm for any class (see "The Art & Skill of Radiotelegraphy" available as a free download from FISTS). While I also had to take and pass a 20wpm test for my Extra, the 5wpm does not irk me. I simply want people to have the basics so that they won't be afraid to pursue this at a later date as their interests change. I want people to know that they can learn it instead of believing the naysayers who try to convince them that it is "too hard".

I've made worldwide HF contacts from my car so there are alternatives. I know apartment dwellers who go down to the local park regularly and put up a temporary antenna on these base plates that campers sometimes use.

Packet is declining on VHF/UHF. We have some lively usage for other purposes in our area. Start a simplex net or a repeater net. Do some weak signal SSB or CW work. Interesting things crop up from time to time.

There are people who are pushing ahead on their code for that reason. I've seen several postings to that effect on various ham sites. Others are pushing ahead simply because they don't want to wait.

you want to force others down a blind technological alley and promote the flasehood spread by some In a the legal sense I have it flase that all perosn can learn code

but that is just a red herring

Code testing lacks any legal basis wisince WRC-2003

anything test that fails the burden of being legal must go

We have to remove unnecessary and superfluous licensing requirements.

Who is "Jimmie"? There's a "Jimmie D" who has posted to rrap recently.
I'm not him

Who is this "Jimmie" person? Can't be me, because I've never claimed to be "serving...country in other ways". And I work some HF CW DX, but not as much as many other hams.

No protests from me. Just a statement of fact: I am not "Slow Code".

the actual length of a quarter-wave whip for 73 MHz?

No, that's your game, Len.

One can always tell when Len is losing the debate - he starts following his profile.

Gee, Len, you've posted to rrap as lenanderson@mog-ur.com nocwtest@aol.com

lenof21@aol.com
lenover21@aol.com
averyfine@aol.com
averyfineman@aol.com

and the screen name you use now.

Those are just the ones we know of, too. There are probably more. Many of your posts are anonymous, too.

Maybe you were "Cutie Boy", Len, doing a bad imitation of "Scratchi".

For all we know, Len or Brian Burke, N0IMD could be "Slow Code". I don't mean to be insulting, but since "SC" insists on being anonymous, he could be anybody.

I just know he isn't me.

It's really simple, "SC". Len has no tolerance for disagreement with his cherished views. All you have to do to get him going is to disagree with him. Or do something even worse: prove he is wrong (mistaken) about something.

Dee, place all presently licensed USA amateurs in front of stations equipped with a manual key AND CWGET. Have them operate operate any CW Only Contest with whichever is more comfortable for them to use. Total the scores...

I think you get the point.

Dee, you have a Ham Husband to take care of the Ohm's Law and Theory

>It's all about proving that you value a ham license so much that

I never took "boot camp." I took BASIC TRAINING in the Army.
There we learned how to "close with the enemy and destroy him."

Does that mean you think a ham license is some permission to go out and destroy others?

>If you've never programmed in assembly language, don't talk to me >about being a real programmer.

Ah, but I have done working Assembler for 6800s, 6502s, 8051s, and, lately, some Microchip PICs...in addition to FORTRAN 77 and various dialects of BASIC, ADA (the government's Pascal).

The "real" programmers I know can do high-level and well as low-level programming. None of them can design and build a working computer, though. I have.

>If you've never passed a Morse code >exam, don't talk to me about being a real ham.

Wouldn't dream of it. :-)

A ham is defined as "the butchered meat of swine." :-)

Ah, but YOU 'define' a "real ham" as one who does morse code radiotelegraphy!

Strange, but the FCC (the agency that grants those licenses) doesn't think so. In fact, Part 97 Title 47 C.F.R. doesn't even mention the word "ham." But, YOU are a "real" one?

If you are a "real" ham, WHAT IS YOUR CALL?

There is NO separate pass-fail TEST for "image, SST [sic] or fax" nor for data or voice required by the FCC for an amateur license. ["SSTV"]

The ONLY separate pass-fail TEST is for manual telegraphy.

Hardly. ALL of the pro-code 1x2s in here, plus some 1x3s,

If morse code radiotelegraphy were so "good," why hasn't NASA picked up on it for the Deep Space Net? For the quarter-million-mile 'DX' path to our moon? Why have the maritime folks GIVEN UP on morse code for Safety Of Life At Sea? [GMDSS uses a form of data, automated]

PSK will allow 100 WPM data to get through when all the morsepersons have to use their imaginations to fill in the garbled morse characters.

Still, the argument over the separate pass-fail "CW" TEST is there with all the morsepersons wanting it be kept forever and ever in FCC regulations...WHY?

Rhetorical question. The separate pass-fail "CW" TEST is there because: (1) The ARRL wants it (they "know what is best for ham radio"); (2) The already-licensed had to take a morse test and everyone else had better take one, too!

I guess you did NOT read my admission of a typo?

Of course not, you have me "killfiled" because my comments are just so "horrid" at not speaking the ARRL party line.

An approximation of a quarter-wave monopole in FEET is 234/(frequency in MHz).

234 / 73 = 3.205 FEET.

Tsk, the nit-pickers just didn't do the math. A quarter is NOT '0.205' but 0.250. Nobody checked that out. :-)

Not even N2EY, the Mother Superior of the newsgroup who scrutinizes all of my postings with a beady eye, ready to have a "WRONG" orgy, hopping up and down in glee at "mistakes" and "errors" that "always" occur. :-)

Dee, since you have me "killfiled" you won't see this post. I won't hold that against you. It's just another "ostrich syndrome" of the pro-coders refusing to see the reality of now. :-)

No, it isn't.

The requirements for US amateur radio license have been slowly but steadily reduced for more than 25 years now. Not just the code tests but also the writtens. That's not the fault of those taking the tests.

Dee, you know that's not true. There are countless present hams, former hams, and people who were denied amateur licenses based upon the Morse Code exam who actually studied Morse Code and who never got to the point where they could use morse code on a practical level.

Didn't say you did. I'm saying that if you had said something as atrocious as that 10 years ago, W0EX and K3LT would have kicked you over to the NCI Camp.

And sometimes CW doesn't get through even with skilled operators. And sometimes you use CWGet to help you along when you find that your skills are lacking.

Larry Roll had one scenarion, and in that scenario, CW was the only mode that would get through, and it would always get through.

I used to hand plot RADAR image reports that I received over TTY, but those were the olden days. We've moved far beyond that now.

Satellite remote sensing is digital. A seven layer image could be sent by CW, but it would take a long time.

Glad to hear you say that. Why were you so silent on that subject when K3LT and W0EX were saying otherwise?

What they wouldn't claim is possible is that there are conditions where even CW wouldn't get through.

That supposedly happened several years ago. But, it's about the only "proof" the pro-code-testers have for "enforcement" of the code test. Too bad they can't effectively argue their case to the United States Coast Guard. The USCG quit monitoring the 500 KHz international maritime distress frequency about the same time.

>korea then switched pretty quickly

Really. The "medium-haul" radio comms (50 to 200 miles, roughly) was handled by the more-mobile AN/GRC-26 (hut on a deuce and a half truck towing a MG set) where the TTY was favored for its already-written messages followed by simultaneous voice. The bulk of land-to-land messaging was handled by the "TRCs" or transportable radio relay sets carrying four multiplexed voice channels. Each voice channel could handle four TTY circuits.
All of that was left-over stuff from World War II.

Short-range comms were handled almost exclusively by FM voice from the AN/PRC-6 (2nd generation HT, introduced just before 1950) and the manpacks ranging from SCR-300 (original "walkietalkie" of WWII) to the AN/PRC-8 through -10 (in the three overlapping "line" bands just introduced). Vehicular radios were a whole series of "VRCs" now arranged in the "line" bands at high-HF to low-VHF running voice FM. Many of those VRCs had become known as "tank radios" of WWII under their "SCR-" IDs.

Fans of the AN/GRC-9 would be disappointed in the LACK of use of that WWII relic and its arm-wasting manual generator. It operated only at low-HF. Tactically, it was a throwback to pre-WWII days of military radio and didn't suit the rapidly-shifting field tactics in Korea.

Long-haul radio comms in Korea (beyond 200 miles) was almost exclusively HF TTY plus all the wireline TTY (land permitting). Comms to FEC Hq in Tokyo was a mix of VHF radio relay, HF TTY (direct), and wireline (including underwater cable to cross the sea). Some of that was encrypted TTY using a second-generation system similar to the rolling-code "SIGABA" of the second world war times. [never cracked until the USS Pueblo was captured nearly intact]

In the early 1960s and the heating up of the Southeast Asia Live Fire Exercise, the AN/PRC-25 channel-tuned VHF FM voice portable made its debut. The "Prick-25" became the radio of choice for land field units. All solid-state except for the final PA, a battery-filament tube. A few years later the AN/PRC-77 was introduced with ALL-solid-state active devices. Over 120,000 PRC-25s and PRC-77s were manufactured. The PRC-8 to PRC-10 series was also used but the high turnover in personnel made the PRC-25 favored due to easy operation.

VHF and UHF radio relay was the major comms carrier in SE Asia during the Vietnam War. Multi-channel voice, each voice channel could handle several multiplexed TTY circuits. Most firebases were identifiable by the antenna structures for those radio relay sets. Radio relay on VHF-UHF was a huge operation but never well-publicized in amateur radio mags.

Vehicular comms were still done by the VRCs in Vietnam but, the lack of terrain for effective armor limited that to the supplies vehicles. Long-haul comms to Japan and Hawaii Hqs were done by HF TTY, either direct or relayed through Manila or Okinawa. [Far East Command Hq was transferred from Tokyo to Fort Shafter, HI, about 1958 although there were relays (HF TTY) through USAF-maintained HF radio near Tokyo to link to the States; USAF took over the USA HF radio facilities there in 1963]

Experiments with satellite commsats began during the Vietnam War but those were largely just experiments. They got PR because satcomm was new and noteworthy to news editors, seemed exciting with big, big antenna dishes, etc. Satcomm ops never took off until after the Vietnam War was over in 1973. Once the satcomms' relay was possible, the use of HF for long-haul circuits was relegated to a standby role.

It's a much-ballyhooed MYTH that "CW" was essential to radio comms even during WWII. [maybe it was due to Hollywood liking the mystique of morsemen at their keys with headphones on and doing the thousand-yard stare?] The major long-haul comms circuits were TTY even then. In the electronics trade shows of the early 1970s, the Teletype Corporation was displaying a gold-plated TTY terminal as the half-millionth! The already-WRITTEN messages were always preferred by field commanders for accuracy and reliability. An added plus was that TTY could be encrypted ON-LINE when needs be, even for the USN as far back as 1940. The famous Command Sets of WWII aircraft were used primarily in voice mode, by the pilots; was very little time to have the radio op write down messages and bring them up to the cockpit; radio ops on B-17s and B-24s were basically gunners first, radiomen second. Liason Sets were seldom used and then only when the air was "peaceful" over friendly territory.

The morsemen in here have RANK, STATUS, PRIVILEGE and Vanity (note the 1x2 calls seen in here)...lobbied for by the much-older hams who were after rank, status, privilege due to morsemanship. These morsemen are the "best" and they don't hesitate to tell everyone so. They demand obediance to their wishes...which is to maintain their rank, status, privilege due to morseman-ship...and their perceived ability ('nobility?') to look down on all the no-code-test advocates as if they are somehow "better." AS IF... :-(

of date]

Frequency coordination is ALWAYS a problem in ANY radio service.
It gets worse when there are thousands of users in a relatively small locale. The FCC long ago gave up on trying to coordinate the PLMRS users and delegated that to the individual private user groups...public safety, railroad, businesses, etc.

It didn't help the model hobby industry to come out with fixed-frequency R-C Tx and Rx in order to sell them at lower cost... and makes them lighter (important for flying models). The trend
now is to have frequency-synthesis techniques on receivers; it is easier to that in transmitter boxes (plenty of room, not a weight problem). Considerate modelers will be aware of who is using what channel, do the "flag" display thing (if appropriate) and try not to cause another model any catastrophy. [a model helo can cost up to $500, hardly a toy...anyone who deliberately interferes with one causing a crash will have the helo owner physically confronting the interferer...not so usual with an amateur radio interferer]

One problem with frequency coordination is the territoriality of thinking that a coordinate frequency is ONLY for the intended use and those not WITH a coordinator shouldn't be there. In model flying that would be the casual "park flyer" who is not a local club member. In amateur radio it is some casual user unaware of the "authorized" nature of coordinate frequencies;

yet the FCC allows all the OPTION of using any allocated mode in any allocated band. The FCC catches that with the "do not interfere with another user" requirement common to every radio service. Problem is, interference still happens. :-)

If you want to get into esoteric terms consider:

The man who uses a plotting board to calculate artillery elevations and azimuths is called a "COMPUTER".

Just 25 years? I guess you forgot about the "Conditional" license where hams get an upgrade from their buddy.

No, of course not. It's not anyones fault except the FCC that they put offices so far away from ham's residences.

No most of them have left due to the spam created by Mark Morgan, the interminable pontification of Len Anderson, the compulsive responses that some seem to feel that they must post to the spam, the vulgarity of people like Opus, the slamming that people like Slow Code do to those who licensed or will license under the current system and so on.

i.e. They left because it was impossible to have a good, spirited debate without things getting out of hand.

I only drop in occasionally to see what's happening. Mostly I don't bother to respond as it has proven to be pointless with all the bad eggs on line.

"CW always gets through" in only one scenario, and that is a fictitious Can't tell what your point is. Those experienced with code and using only their ears and brain will beat CWGet in any contest you care to name. It doesn't do the job when there are a multitude of operators calling at the same time. Also CWGet cannot copy the average manually keyed Morse code.

So whatever your point is, you didn't prove anything.

I've never mentioned the "dumbing down" argument. My point is that there is a body of basic knowledge that all should know. The difficulty arises in determining what that basic knowledge should be. Generally, the experienced people should be the ones to define what constitutes basic knowledge. The beginners are too inexperienced to do so.

Please do not insult me by stereotyping like that. I happen to be a degreed engineer (B.S. in Aerospace Engineering) with 20 years of applied experience in engineering (aerospace, nuclear, mechanical and automotive fields). Should I happen to run into a need to use Ohms law and so on, I am perfectly capable of doing so. In addition, I was the one who taught the class for our club members who wished to upgrade to Extra, a class which my husband attended so that he could upgrade from General to Extra.

You have ASSumed and made a donkey of yourself.

Blasphemy! The IBM 650 was the first computer

Bi-Quinary (like an abacus) with a magnetic drum and tons of air-conditioning to cool the hundreds of dual triodes.

Actually, Mark Morgan is merely the necessary balance to Robesin's postings. I read Marks posting that are responding to what I've posted and very little else that he posts.

I do smaple some of Lens posting because they sometimes carry a lot of satire. What do you thik of Len characterizing you as "Miss Manners?"

Opus? He/She must be posting under another name these days. Ditto K3LT, K4YZ, and N2EY.

bested by whom?

I donb't need to justify anything to a man with no name

no squirming you are just mucking raking which is all the ProCode forces are able to do anymore

That's right, Mark. Change the Subject line and everything will go away, right?

We are still waiting for a definition of "homobrew".

Well???

You know I've queried people here who said they had problems and "couldn't" learn code. In every case the problem came down to bad training methods or bad study habits or insufficient study time or unrealistic expectations (i.e. in the time or effort required) or a combination of any or all of them.

Any ham who has sufficient operating experience on HF has experienced total radio blackouts due to solar storms. HF gets wiped out except for very local communications due to ground wave or line of sight. Any ham that denies that is a fool, inexperienced, or a liar.

So what? I've never claimed to be highly skilled. I've always said that my skills are quite modest. However, when conditions are poor, even I can beat CWGet. I'll sometimes use it when I'm too tired to focus and the signal is fast and strong. Otherwise it just doesn't do it. The rest of the time, I depend on my own skills.

If CW doesn't get through with skilled operators, then it's due to bad conditions. In general, CW is a robust mode that will typically be the last mode to fail as conditions worsen.

Defensive knee-jerk reaction and exaggeration in response to the equally idiotic posters who claim that there is no need or use for CW in modern radio.

I see Mark Morgan as the necessary balance in the vicious postings by Robesin. We actually have very little in common. We both claim to be amateur radio operator and military veterans. I got chopped to the US Army twice, so I know a little bit about the Army. I also got chopped to the US Navy once, and there and at service schools, and in Somalia, was fairly close to the USMC.

As far as amateur radio goes, the only one of these bozos I've ever QSO'd was Heil when I was DX on Guam.

Not so. However, all the digital and image modes are merely a matter of connecting the radio to the computer and running the appropriate software. Once I decided to try the digital thing, I made the interface and was up and running in an hour. After a couple of months, it became rather boring. On the other hand, code needs to be learned before it can be tried. Many people will give up learning before they've had a chance to try it if there is not a test for it.

Yet PSK fails utterly and completely when there is an aurora. And the ionospheric problems associated with an aurora cause problems far south of the actual aurora zone so it is not just a northern issue. The computer may be sending PSK at 100wpm per minute but the data won't be copyable on the other end. Even a beginner sending and receiving at 5wpm will have better throughput. When the aurora is relatively mild, even voice will be more successful than PSK.

I think they're both a little off plumb but Morgan is the worst. He's been known to post hundreds of messages in a day. Robeson can't seem to resist jabbing him.

Doesn't bother me in the least. I hold myself to a high standard and believe that the world would be more pleasant if others did the same.
However it's their problem if they don't. Occasionally I get a little annoyed and so get a little sharp but I work hard at not doing so. You get a lot better response from people (in general) if you treat them right.

Perhaps but that and worse has been said to him. He seems to have a compulstion to attempt to refute every comment directed at him. I've posted in here suggesting "shunning" those who slam him but he doesn't seem to want to. He'd rather perpetuate the threads.

Thank you, I appreciate that. I enjoy good debates but find that a debate that has deteriorated to personal insults is boring. It's unfortunate that happens so much in here.

He doesn't need to create dozens of posts to refute each one. Many of Mark's posts are and were quite vicious. I killfiled Morgan the day he made unacceptable comments about Steve's deceased daughter.

I happen to remember the post. He said that one can serve in other ways.
He did not say whether he himself served in the military or in other ways.

Yet based on that comment, Len Anderson and others have made ASSumptions.

I'm a pro code test advocate and an Extra. I would never hide behind anonymity. And I do not hold the candidates responsible for the quality or extent of the tests. They have no choice in the matter. What the new ham does have a choice in is to either stagnate or progress. He can gain the experience to then join in discussions and contribute or he can put his foot in his mouth with such inexperienced statements as "you need an amplifier to work DX" or "you can't work Texas from Michigan on VHF". However even then, I try to avoid anything that could be taken as a put down because I want them to stay in ham radio and grow and develop. I'll invite them over to work a contest with my measly 100 watts or I'll introduce them to one of the QRP enthusiasts. I'll invite them to work the VHF station at Field Day and pair them up with one of our VHF experts. It's called being a good ham and an Elmer.

I think Len means the standard ARRL conditioning program, the one where we all practice ARRL-think and the one by which we all stuff checks into envelopes and mail them to the League periodically.

it in over a decade.

Len's not sure of what he's for, but he knows damned well what he is against.

He is against morse testing, the ARRL, overly-proud radio amateurs and Fessenden among others.

Nah. Wouldn't be close to Hans Brakob. Hans has a sense of humor. Humor is very rare among morsemen; Hans is a morseman but is NOT for the US amateur radio code test. :-)

Blowcode is just an Attention-WANTER, making trouble so he can feel "famous." All he can think about is memorized lines from the ARRL hymnbook of a half century past. He can't think for himself. His bigotry is in the way.

And there are also a lot of them drooling like Pavlovs dog waiting for it to disappear.

CW is alway the focal point.

I've never heard: "get a license, there are fewer questions. I have heard
"Get a license, no CW required, or code speed is reduced, upgrade.

If the CW requirement were raised to 13, I doubt we'd hear: "Get a license, code speed requirement has been increased.

Oh well.

Once you master the electronic key you'll wonder how you ever got by without one. I used a straight key for years and then got an electronic one. It made code more fun. I tried a bug once, but after using the electronic key I lost my timing on the side to side stuff.

One thing for sure in the maritime story above, someone did know morse, and the rescuers probably weren't going to wait for a full message after the sos. they would start the rescue right away, they didn't need to see a message.

Tsk, Larry Troll BORROWED an old, old saying in ["CW"] ham radio. It was around in the 1930s. Troll tried to make a scenario of a desert island where a "floating" Ten-Tec washed ashore to use for 'rescue.' :-)

Not to worry. Some hams are 'experimenting' with a small slice right next to 500 KHz, using it for 'radio research' or something. Like that region of the EM spectrum has "never been examined" before. :-)

Oh, dear, now Jimmie will get on MY case because YOU told me to "shut up!" :-)

Ackshully, that's 'okay' since an NCTA said that to another NCTA. We can't EVER tell a PCTA to shut up!

I could have added "tradition" as a third 'reason' but hams can't use Spark, the very first way hams used radio. That's been outlawed. So much for "tradition."

Mark Morgan is an NCTA.

Len Anderson is an NCTA.

Opus is an NCTA.

We are all "vulgar" BECAUSE we are NCTA? Must be... :-)

Carl Stevenson is an NCTA. He quit posting. Is the present head of NCI.

Hans Brakob is a sort-of NCTA even though he IS a morseperson of long experience. Hans doesn't post much now.

Cecil Moore, a long-timer, one who DOES "CW" but doesn't think the code test should be there. [anyone who owns and rides a spiffy Harley is hardly bad...]
Cecil hangs out in rec.radio.amateur.antenna now.

Now we get to the PCTAs, the self-styled Rulers of RRAP:

K4YZ, the USMC Imposter who has NEVER made available ANY documentation of his supposed "18-year career with USMC."
Ten kinds of filthy outpouring from that sick puppy here.

N2EY, K4YZ's stand-in, who tells everyone that disagrees with him they are "wrong." Won't say what he does for a living or for who. Prissy Mother Superior who dotes on ancient times before he was born.

K8MN, probably a graduate of Karlsrhue, busy trying to smack down ANY NCTA that DARES to talk back to him!

He is a "Superior" with a capital S.

Chris Davies, a relative newcomer, trying to assert hisself as some kind of "superior" but disses all NCTAs just like the older, unwiser PCTAs do.

Ed Hare of the ARRL Lab used to be here. He was about the only rational PCTA in the group but tried to overrate his employer to the point of nausea.

Dozens of Little BOYS using anony-mousies, no brains, no courage to give their calls, busy regressing to the middle-school machismo they use in postings.

Larry Troll left here. He was a claimed summa cum laude in Human Reseources, claimed he could get ANY personnel job he wanted. He wound up driving a BUS.
Bragged a lot but couldn't hack it.

Lots and lots of assorted other NCTAs have been in here all blabbering about the gloriousness and majesty of morse (several ex-USN chiefs in that group). They've all LEFT. [couldn't take the heat, got out of the kitchen...they couldn't be served in the dining room
by NCTAs, poor dears]

>i.e. They left because it was impossible to have a good, spirited debate >without things getting out of hand.

Riiiiight..."ein Reich, ein Volk" for "debate." All repeat the ARRL party line of everyone do code or you are all bad people. Lemming mentality. Hive mind.
All think alike (Big Brother is watching you!).

>I only drop in occasionally to see what's happening.

Riiiiight... :-)

>Mostly I don't bother >to respond as it has proven to be pointless with all the bad eggs on line.

Ostrich syndrome. Anyone NOT following the ARRL party line is a "bad egg?" Okay, then the entirety of the OTHER radio services are "bad eggs." ALL of those either quit using telegraphy or never considered it in the first place. Ergo, all those OTHER radio services are "bad eggs."

Yeah, let's hear it for "debate." "Ein Reich, ein volk!"

Let's open up Auschvitz, Lublin, Bergen-Belsen, etc. for the heinous NCTAs! Do away with all those "bad eggs."
They don't "debate" using the ARRL party line!

It's "putsch comes to shove" time! :-)

Remember: "Arbeit macht frei!"

Tsk. Miccolis imagines he is "helpful." His concept of "helpful" is everyone doing as he says, thinking what he thinks. That's not reality. It's 'hive mind' stuff.

It might be that Miccolis doesn't understand 'reality.'
He says he "lives in the ham bands." The rest of us live in residences like houses or apartments. He has funny ideas of zoning laws and how they affect hundreds of peoples' lives about THEIR neighborhood, not to mention local tax laws.

Miccolis is off on some Hate kick. He just can't stand opposition to his beloved ARRL's ideas or anyone <gasp!> disagreeing with the mighty of Newington.
Therefore he stretches even his concept of reality to the breaking point...and broke it more than once. He NEEDS to find the worst of everyone disagreeing with him. A sort of junior-league Major Dud (Robeson) now.

"Consider that language a moment. 'Purposefully and materially supported hostilities against the United States' is in the eye of the beholder, and this administration has proven itself to be astonishingly impatient with criticism of any kind. The broad powers given to Bush by this legislation allow him to capture, indefinitely detain, and refuse a hearing to any American citizen who speaks out against Iraq or any other part of the so-called 'War on Terror.'

"If you write a letter to the editor attacking Bush, you could be deemed as purposefully and materially supporting hostilities against the United States. If you organize or join a public demonstration against Iraq, or against the administration, the same designation could befall you. One dark-comedy aspect of the legislation is that senators or House members who publicly disagree with Bush, criticize him, or organize investigations into his dealings could be placed under the same designation. In effect, Congress just gave Bush the power to lock them up." -- William Rivers Pitt

"It has become clear in recent months that a critical mass of the American people have seen through the lies of the Bush administration; with the president's polls at an historic low, growing resistance to the war Iraq, and the Democrats likely to take back the Congress in mid-term elections, the Bush administration is on the ropes. And so it is particularly worrying that President Bush has seen fit, at this juncture to, in effect, declare himself dictator." -- Frank Morales

You can bring up any topic you want, and Mark in the Dark will show up out of nowhere and take a crap on it. He comes up like he's an expert on everything.

I just roll around on the floor laughing when I see the responces he gets regarding his posts from people that don't know him.

Markie hasn't quite figured out that his brain is not connecting all the dots.

Whatever the topic, you can bet that Mark is an expert on it. Then, when someone points out his errors he calls them "liers".
It is no wonder he has no friends.

You couldn't be more wrong. The FCC should get to define what "basic knowledge" is, and those that do the defining don't have a clue what Morse Code is. But they've been buffaloed into believing that it tis something magical.

I can't help but think that all engineers, aerospace or civil or otherwise, had to learn Ohm's Law as part of "thier" professional certification. If I am wrong, then shame on the state of American Engineerism, and shame on America. No wonder we're overrun with engineers from India, Pakistan, China and Russia.

Learning Oh,'s Law for a hobby is one thing, but a professional engineer........

Be kind enough to show where. Merely claiming to be an engineer encounters or pedophilia?

When he does, I'll be sure to keep track of the ratio of Robesin postings to Dee postings.

Um, yeh. It's really awful, isn't it? Almost as bad as accusing people of rape.

Did you know that his daughter was severly retarded, and he makes jokes about "the short bus" on RRAP? I doubt that his daughter was well off enough to ride the short bus that Robesin pokes fun at..

So what? When I'm in a contest, I use the best computer ever developed (the human brain). When the person on the other end is sending manually keyed code, again I use the good old brain. That I sometimes use CWGet is no particular endorsement of it. It's a tool that I use when I'm tired and still want to operate code. However unless the signal is of good quality and volume, it ends up being necessary to go back to the good old human brain. My decision then is to either put in the extra effort to focus or just call it a night and go to bed.

Mechanical engineers don't have a need for Ohm's law. They go hire the electrical engineers. Aerospace engineering is a branch of mechanical engineering (we don't get to drop the lesser terms in the equations since they have a significant impact for our field). Again we go hire the electrical engineers. Same with civil and structural engineers. On the other hand electrical engineers generally do not study basic pressure vessal theory but go hire the mechanical engineers for that.

> Learning Oh,'s Law for a hobby is one thing, but a professional

Again it depends on the field. We all studied common areas such as calculus and fast fourier transforms but items unique to a field generally were not taught across the board. We didn't study Ohms law and the electrical engineers didn't study cantilever beam theory.

Obviously it's someone who's been here awhile.

Troll was the racist poster ("My favorite black on the bus...," and "Welfare mothers of Color with their hands out...").

Deignan was the vanity callsign collector and the original "RF Commando." He called me a liar when I said he had collected 12
callsigns, but I was wrong - one of the callsigns actually belonged to his wife at the same address. So I guess I was a liar after all. I should have known that he had a Ham Wife that collected vanity callsigns, too.

Deignan's buddy in Hawaii loaned him his PO Box number so he could scam
some Hawaiin calls, meanwhile, the Hawaiin PO Box owner was scamming a Guam callsign. Never been to Guam and could have operated /KH2 like I did for two years. I guess a Hawaiin Call Stroke Guam Call is a pretty cool thing...

Anyway, these are the guys who pass judgement on me because I am too fat, lazy, and stupid to buy into the whole Morse Exam stuff at 5, and then 13, and then 20 WPM.

> Dee D. Flint, N8UZE

That's the beauty of anon postings, they don't have to follow their own
"style."

I began posting as hot-ham when I gave up Billy Beeper at Hans request.
I'd prefer to not post with my name and/or call as I used to, as I seem to get lots and lots of spam when I do.

Meanwhile, Robesin has posted my name, call and address much more than
I have.

That's so swell of him.

I guess when Mark posts Robesin's address and phone number, it's just tit for tat. No?

Nope. The Catholic School can only accept students that apply. No one is forced to apply or attend. And there are no geographical restrictions to the area that a Catholic School services, only the ability of a parent to get their child to school on time.

Hard to say. One would have to weigh it against the specific wording of the law and adjudicated cases to determine if it was or was not illegal.

How do you come to that conclusion? I know very little about her politics and it wouldn't matter if I did. As I recall, she defended her choice far better than I or anyone else could have done it for her. I supported her right to choose a legally available call sign even though I thought her choice a little strange. It's not within my power to make others accept it.

>> > Talk about not just sexist, but bonifide sexual harassment (and Jim >> > never once chimed in to say boo)....

As tasteless and tacky as it was, it may not have actually meet the legal definition of sexual harassment. She was not threatened with a job loss or with an overall loss in her quality of life. Discussion groups are not for the faint of heart, especially ones like these newsgroups. Participation in these news groups does not contribute to quality of life in any significant way. It is an idle and insignificant form of recreation.

>> She chose the call sign.

Yup. A simple check of the call sign database shows that it is a vanity call. So it was hers by choice. I don't recall for sure but didn't she say she did it on a dare?

Not the same thing at all and you very well know it. Her overall quality of life is seriously affected and her life could even be in danger. Besides rapists don't care what the victim is wearing. They are looking for some one they can successfully dominate and terrorize. The shy school girl in the dowdy clothes hurrying home with her books clutched to her chest is just as likely or even more likely to be raped than the brazen hookers down on Eight Mile (that's a Detroit reference).

> Was she asking for it and is she on her own?

See my comment above. If I saw some one being threatened with violence and it were within my power to do something about it, I would. It wouldn't matter if it were that shy school girl or that brazen hooker. Today, I'd have to limit myself to calling for help but in my younger, more fit days, I'd also have taken an active (i.e. physical) part in her defense.

Nope. Why should I? It accomplishes nothing. I want people to enjoy ham radio. I want their motivation to develop to be based on the joy they get out of it and the joy they see others get out of it. Sarcasm does not serve that objective.

There are way too many people that confuse honest mistakes with lying.
Don't be one of them. The FCC has been getting on people for doing that and making them justify the calls or give them up.

Don't see why. But again the FCC is getting wise to such antics.

Depends on how bad you want the privileges. Just don't ask for something for nothing. Originally I had no interest in ham radio but my husband at the time dragged me to a class as something we could do together. As I got involved, I found it interesting. I deduced very early on that what I wanted to get out of ham radio would best be served by going all the way to Extra. Since I wanted the privileges, I met the requirements including the 20 wpm.

Not everyone wants those privileges. Kim is a case in point. She is a Tech Plus and could have gotten her General with just a written test and no further code testing as of April 2000. She chose not to because she did not really like HF operations. The typical background static of HF bothers her. Her interests lie in VHF and up. Since she has full privileges there, the General does not serve her goals.

Very true. But it takes a lot of discipline to consistently write in a different style and not make tell tale slips. When Len Anderson was posting as Avery Fineman, it was quite obvious they were the same person.

Doesn't really matter as with the internet this information is findable one way or another if one cares to go after it. Posting it here only shows that you have the internet search skills of any average user and get some kind of juvenile thrill out of posting it.

Mark has decided to be the new de-facto group moderator. He thinks that he deserves this position due to the sheer volume of his posts alone. According to Mark we are all guilty of identity theft, others of us are guilty of yet to be named "crimes" and those of us who disagree with him are "liers".

Mark will now accuse me of being Steve, or Dave, or Roger, or whoever is his accusee du jour, and you may rest assured he will post in bulk.

Go for it, Mark! Speak, Boy, speak!

What is your point.?

I amswered his query in a positive way.

You obviously know there ARE cw portions of bands PLUS a cw only band which is OBVIOUSLY what was referred to.

If you could not manage 5wpm in 5 years then you have an unusual difficulty, or you were not taking the time to do it and stay with it.
Remember I said "normal faculties and normal physical dexterity". A person with ADD or Dyslexia may not be able to , and others with other issues may not. (I know lots of blind guys who are hams, they dont think blindness is an impediment to ham radio or the code)

He asked if cw would keep us from Amateur radio. I amswered the question indicating I did not think cw was a difficult impediment and used examples why from my own experience.

If you have dyslexia then youdo not have normal faculties and dexterity and the post did not refer to you,. Why bother responding?

Obviously it's someone who's been here awhile.

"Welfare mothers of Color with their hands out...").

Deignan was the vanity callsign collector and the original "RF Commando." He called me a liar when I said he had collected 12
callsigns, but I was wrong - one of the callsigns actually belonged to his wife at the same address. So I guess I was a liar after all. I should have known that he had a Ham Wife that collected vanity
callsigns, too.

Deignan's buddy in Hawaii loaned him his PO Box number so he could scam
some Hawaiin calls, meanwhile, the Hawaiin PO Box owner was scamming a Guam callsign. Never been to Guam and could have operated /KH2 like I did for two years. I guess a Hawaiin Call Stroke Guam Call is a pretty cool thing...

Anyway, these are the guys who pass judgement on me because I am too fat, lazy, and stupid to buy into the whole Morse Exam stuff at 5, and
then 13, and then 20 WPM.

That's the beauty of anon postings, they don't have to follow their own
"style."

I began posting as hot-ham when I gave up Billy Beeper at Hans request.
I'd prefer to not post with my name and/or call as I used to, as I seem to get lots and lots of spam when I do.

Meanwhile, Robesin has posted my name, call and address much more than
I have.

That's so swell of him.

I guess when Mark posts Robesin's address and phone number, it's just tit for tat. No?

>And when Roger Wiseman posts Mark's home address, phone number, etc., is that just more "tit for tat"? Sorry, Billy, but I prefer to think of that as maliciousness.

You already did. And I do not "need to pove" anything to the likes of YOU, Mark. You are, for the most part, an inconsequential flea, one that I toy with at will.
Tell you what, Mark. When you learn to use a spell check program I'll use my real name. Better yet. When you learn 5wpm and upgrade, I'll meet you on 17M some afternoon and you can then learn my name AND callsign.

I have no other life but online? Aren't you being a bit guilty of calling the kettle black? That is an odd comment coming from one who often posts a hundred or more times a day. Being a bit of a hypocrite is yet another of your endearing qualities, Mark.
And so far as sock "puupet"s are concerned, what gives you, the goon with ten email addresses, to be critical?
Here again your convoluted thought processes come to the front.

And I am not attacking you, so again, stop flattering yourself. I am merely addressing your posts and batting you to and fro.
Thanks for the entertainment.

Oh, come on. Admit that you're obsessed with Mark and want him to suck
you
off, Wabbit. I think, in fact, all the repressed gays of rec.radio.*

Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined
to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned
hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing

money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin

hey marqueer
why don't you listen to sc & chris and clean up your act?
also, try to rid yourself of the urge to have a penis in your mouth.

Oh, come on. Admit that you're obsessed with Mark and want him to suck
you
off, Wabbit. I think, in fact, all the repressed gays of rec.radio.*
should accept themselves as gay.

hey marqueer
why don't you listen to sc & chris and clean up your act?
also, try to rid yourself of the urge to have a penis in your mouth.

Oh, come on. Admit that you're obsessed with Mark and want him to suck
you
off, Wabbit. I think, in fact, all the repressed gays of rec.radio.*
should accept themselves as gay.

hey marqueer
why don't you listen to sc & chris and clean up your act?
also, try to rid yourself of the urge to have a penis in your mouth.

hey marqueer
why don't you listen to sc & chris and clean up your act?
also, try to rid yourself of the urge to have a penis in your mouth.

Oh, come on. Admit that you're obsessed with Mark and want him to suck
you
off, Wabbit. I think, in fact, all the repressed gays of rec.radio.*
should accept themselves as gay.

This one should provide enough fodder for Mark to post no less than 200 comments this Sunday, none of which will make a lick of sense. Of course, making sense has never been one of Mark's strong points and he needs a minimum of "goading" to go on and on and on and on and....well, no more need be said. You can rest assured that a plethora of misspelled one-liners is sure to follow.

hey marqueer
why don't you listen to sc & chris and clean up your act?
also, try to rid yourself of the urge to have a penis in your mouth.

Oh, come on. Admit that you're obsessed with Mark and want him to suck
you
off, Wabbit. I think, in fact, all the repressed gays of rec.radio.*
should accept themselves as gay.

hey marqueer
why don't you listen to sc & chris and clean up your act?
also, try to rid yourself of the urge to have a penis in your mouth.

Oh, come on. Admit that you're obsessed with Mark and want him to suck
you
off, Wabbit. I think, in fact, all the repressed gays of rec.radio.*
should accept themselves as gay.

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined
to
stoned
hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing

money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted

to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

No, you're wrong there, Wabbit. Your quoting sucks, too.

Oh, come on. Admit that you're obsessed with Mark and want him to suck
you
off, Wabbit. I think, in fact, all the repressed gays of rec.radio.*
should accept themselves as gay.

Lest we forget other great statesemen, it will be a mere matter of minutes before Mark Morgan steps up to the plate to tell us (in 100 posts or more) that he majored in statesmanship while obtaining one of his many alleged degrees. What else can one expect from a former Colonel, Geophysicist, and all around authority on every topic from Programming to Morse Code to Bisexuality?

And you keep changing the parameters of the challenge.

Are you saying that of those amateurs that learned the code, that they are all still highly proficient in it? I think most learned the code as a licensing hurdle, and never looked back.

Then there are the majority of hams who have no-code licenses...

They don't even have a definition of what Morse Code is within the

Why aren't the communications billets merely a direct duty assignment

Not me. Jim/N2EY is the one who trotted out that strawman. I guess if he can't have amateur radio the way he wants it, he'll make sure it becomes a non-technical hobby.

Agreed. Especially when he expresses a desire to get to someone's wife Bell, what are you using to post with? It's not attributing correctly.

No.

Incorrect. Catholic schools do not have to serve every area, nor accept every student.

> The Catholic School can only accept students that apply. No one > is forced to apply or attend.

That's true. But it's not the point.

> And there are no geographical > restrictions to the area that a Catholic School services, only the

Which is the exact opposite of what public schools must do.

Public schools must provide an education for all students in all districts. They must provide transportation to and from school if the student lives beyond a specified distance.

And they cannot charge the studen't family for any of those services.

> > Public schools cannot.

> They can as much as any school can.

No, they cannot.

A Catholic school can refuse to admit any student who applies, for a wide variety of reasons. They can expel any student for similar reasons.

The reason can be as simple as "we're full" or as complicated as "we can't deal with your child's special problems".

Public schools must accept every student in the district. If the student has special needs, the district must deal with them appropriately, even if it means sending the student to a special school at the school district's expense, providing aides and special transportation, etc. And the public school system has to pay for all of it.

Catholic schools can simply say "it's not our problem" and not admit the student.

Does "support for the military" mean that the decisions of the Commander In Chief must never be questioned?

It often seems that way.

Not really.

I do know them and understand them, though. They're not on any US amateur radio exam.

What "self imposed handicaps"?

Yep. That's a helluva thing for a 20 year veteran to be saying. I'm sure he had to spend a fair amount of time in the "Social Actions" office with them trying to reeducate him. And the totally laughable part of all that was that he said he had a degree in human resources and was trying to land a position in that field.

I'm not, though I do throw it in Robesin's face when he call an opinion that differes from his "A LIE!"

They got on Deignan, too.

With some of these guys they think it adds to their credential. It's like the JA's using a JA owned hotel address on Guam to get the Guam 1x2 calls.

But collecting 11 different call and then turning some of them into Hawaiin calls is just another form of megalomania that we see on RRAP.

In QRZ.com, in the name search, type in "RF Commando" or something like that. Nevermind, I'll do it...

There are 1 records matching +rf* +commando*

KB1CCE RF COMMANDOS RHODE ISLAND CHAPTER

There are 3 records matching +Deignan*

KH6HZ DEIGNAN MICHAEL P (This one is a Hawaiin call with a MA addy) WE1RD MICHAEL P DEIGNAN REPEATER ASSOCIATION (This one in Rhode Island, weird)

The 3rd is a yl in Canada, so I'm not posting that.

Anyway, all three of the above calls are at different addresses.

When I post as Hot-Ham, there's no intent to deceive. There is an intent to have a throw-away email address that I've checked the mailbox content about twice. It can fill up with all that spam that the spammers desire.

I Am What I Am. That a famous quote of Popeye.

I think amateur radio is one of the best hobbies ever, and it can also serve in an emergency communications roll.

What does that mean?

Besides, the Conditional stopped being issued about 30 years ago.

The reason FCC stopped doing testing was to save money. They replaced their paid examiners with unpaid volunteers.

Perhaps on the anniversary we can have an "RRAP/Robesin frivilous lawsuit" party on-line?

I think some chicken flavored crackers with extra sharp cheddar cheese, and a bottle of semi-dry Seyval would be nice.

We could play "Hangman" with some of the more rediculous Robesin accusations and threats.

That's because CWGet fails in almost all contest situations. It cannot handle the QRM caused by all the stations calling at once.

No I do not say that all those who learned the code are highly proficient. I am saying that setting someone up with CWGet for a contest is a recipe for failure and a very unenjoyable contest experience. When I first started cw contesting, I had to listen to the station many times through picking out their call letter by letter over a dozen exchanges before throwing in my call. I also sent PSE QRS 5 on many occasions to get the balance of the exchange. But it worked.

If they choose to view as merely a hurdle to pass and never try it, that's sad but that's their problem.

> Then there are the majority of hams who have no-code licenses...

While they have numbers, way too many of them are inactive or have low activity levels. When I work VHF/UHF contests, I sometimes check the call signs of the people worked. Most are Extras, some are Generals, and I've only worked ONE Technician. And that's in a voice contest. Why is that? They have full band privileges and full power privileges yet they don't use them. Why? Same deal with the grid square hunters. And so on.

The ITU has a standard definition of what constitutes International Morse Code that is sufficient for the purpose. The FCC doesn't need to define it. They say we must pass the International Morse Code. It is sufficient that the dot/dash sequence is defined for the characters. The weighting, spacing, and speed can be varied to suit the conditions. For test purposes, the Council of VECs establishes the test standard and that is sufficient since all who go test have the opportunity to train using the exact parameters (tone, weighting, spacing, speed, etc) that will be used on the test. The variations that occur in the real world can be learned on the air.

Since we weren't required to take electrical engineering courses, it is not relevant. Would you require EEs to take basic mechanical engineering courses? That would chew up a couple of years.

> Were you able to hire out your PE exams?

Most engineering jobs do not require that one even have a PE license or registration or whatever they call it these days. Plus there are study guides specifically aimed at the content of the PE exam. Plus the exam for a structural engineer is different from the one for a mechanical engineer is different from the one for an electrical engineer, etc.

No I did not say that. I believe that they do belong in the licensing setup as again for amateur radio, they are basics of the field. Just because my usage of them is low doesn't mean they don't belong there. One needs to learn the basics as they don't yet know what direction their hobby will take them. Learning the basics helps them decide which and when or if they want to further explore various branches of amateur radio.

Similarly, there were several courses I took as part of the basics of engineering but seldom used. I've never done fast fourier transforms in my work as my career did not go that direction. I've rarely used calculus. On the other hand, I spent a significant chunk of my career (12 years out of 33 years) writing engineering software using Fortran and later Visual Basic. The ironic part is that Fortran was a class I hated in college and struggled to get through (Basic was not in use at the time). Once I was out in the real world working on software to use in real situations, I found it to be quite easy and fun.

I'll spell it out for you, Jim.

Half of all USA licensed amateurs are licensed under a Code-Free license. Probably most of the coded licensees never looked back when they learned the code to get past a licensing hurdle, don't use code, and couldn't if their lives depended on it.

So put all USA licensed amateurs in fron of a station equipped with a morse code key and with CWGet and total their scores.

Yep, but nobody ever claimed that amateur radio was being dumbed down.
The USA amateur service has a proud history of it.

It doesn't cost the FCC anything for an amateur to show up for testing, unless you want to claim that the examinees got to file a voucher for their travel.

Beats me. But you know what they say. There's the right way, the wrong way and the Army way. I would not presume to pass judgement on their training.
However it may be that some of the recruits have not yet learned to read a schematic and have never operated a soldering iron. I'm quite sure that is not part of basic training.

So what if it is boring. That is no reason not to learn it. I suspected that digital would end up being boring but since I believe that a person should be striving to increase their knowledge and skills, I decided it was time to become familiar with this area. Afterall, I might find myself in the position of being asked to Elmer someone in this area.

They have different goals and objectives than amateur radio. Government agencies and commercial business do not have the goal of individual self training and experimentation. Comparing amateur radio to government/commercial applications is like comparing apples to pomegranates. They're both red fruits but there the similarity ends.

Different husband. My previous husband dragged me to the Tech class. We split up a few years later. Then after that I met the man who was to become my current husband. It is my current husband who took the Extra class that I was teaching. Sorry for the confusion there.

Although it would have been possible for me to have taught my previous husband since I reached Extra a couple of months before he did.

And I don't criticize some one who does that. It is only when there is the apparent intent to deceive (Len Anderson) or the appaerent intent to violate their ISPs TOS (Mark Morgan), that it is unreasonable.

Such an attempt is foolish. Anyone who is intimidated by that must not be

Whether or not I were to respond to such accusations would make no difference as the postings would still be in the archive. If it did cause a problem in that area, I'd certainly take legal action against the poster and the company who accepted such unfounded accusations.

No not a side step. I'm not a lawyer, judge, legal expert, or a juror weighing evidence in such a case. So I don't have sufficient data to make such a judgement.

Actually I live in one of the suburbs not Detroit itself. However, there and an absolutely wonderful opera company.

On that we agree. So on that upbeat note, let's conclude this extensive discussion (it was fun but we've kind of beaten it to death) and go work some radio.

Can't you see you've won, Mark? It's all over. You've made us understand the genius that you are. The mere fact that you are the most intelligent one here should surely be enough to cause you to step aside and let us imbeciles argue amongst ourselves.

I guess it is because of the raw material they have to work with.

They can be. That's how I did it. I never set foot in an Air Force technical school. Of course I'd already been a radio amateur for seven years when I joined the military. I was awarded my 3-level right out of basic training. I went directed duty to Barksdale AFB after ten days of leave after Amarillo.

Oracle uses a lot of code.

I was having REAL FUN with the CLOWNtesters this weekend all on HF. Set the rig's tx output to about 10 watts and loaded up into the 75m carolina windom with DX callsigns and the occasional rare ITU section. Give em a call and these DX CLOWNTESTERS would fall all over each other thinkin they just worked a needed section an they now will be pinchin a loaf waiting for a card to arrive in the mail to hang on their wall and impress their fatassed ham club blokes! Baaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa hahahahahahhahaha!!! what a bunch of fools.

Removing the code requirement at this late date would do little to increase the number of hams applying for a license. At one time, possibly 30 years ago it would have made sense to replace the code test with one that emphasizes skills that actually have a use in the real world. Sadly, I think that there is little that can be done to attract younger hams into the hobby. There are just too many license-free ways of communicating with people from around the world.

How would retaining the code requirement help to retain those you do get. I do not understand.

I see that you real as well as you spell, which is not very good. I

I "real"? indeed I see what you are responding to but you clearly can't read the sentence since neither of the preceeding poster is tlaking about reatining code testing and neither he 2 yet futher in the tree were talking and code testing

at all

the only one that thinks the poster are sufggesting code testing will retain anything is you and where you get is beyond me

Too bad Miccolis never joined the IEEE. He would have had a ball with their annual Mouse in a Maze contest. He could have explained that all engineering involves maze solutions and that Reggie Fessenden was the first maze solver and ENIAC computed him to be the winner. :-)

Gosh, from what I've seen, DATA on ham bands is a lot like the old computer-modem comms by wireline! Sort of like the Internet and USENET access now. Maybe Dee just get 'bored' easily?

Maybe Dee actually "works" USENET by morse code and her ISP 'translates' that into text? :-)

Sunnuvagun! :-)

Maybe the whole rest of the radio world KNOWS something that the morsepersons don't?

a bus driver. :-)

The Hawaiian buddy was Jeffrey Herman...who feigned
"innocence" on getting the Hawaii PO Box in here! :-)

Yeah, riiiight, knowing Deignan LIVED in Rhode Island Herman got him a Hawaii PO Box address for "vacation" mail or something? :-)

The Morsemen are the Masters! :-)

Morsemen are 'superior' beings above us mundanes... :-)

Fifty-three years ago I first fired-up on HF with a 1 KW transmitter running RTTY. My "first" really big HF transmission. :-)

Didn't get trained in "CW" by the Army, didn't have to use "CW" to transmit on HF or VHF or UHF for the next three years...the middle year involving responsibility of running a team of operators manning 36 to 40 transmitters. No license required. Perfectly legal.
Never needed nor used "CW" since on frequencies that ranged from LF on up to 25 GHz, not even needed on HF last year in operating an SGC 2020 from a boat in a marina.

But, to do AMATEUR radio operation below 30 MHz, one MUST need to pass a "CW" test!

1906 thinking in the year 2006. Ptui.

I use my IEEE e-mail alias. No charge. As a Lifetime Member I could have taken advantage of it sooner. There is some spam filtering with that mail alias but not as much as I hoped.

Miccolis bitterly complains about my PREVIOUS "handles" and confuses an e-mailing alias with 'screen name." :-)

The PCTA amateur extra morsemen rationalize that as "providing

Whatever the PCTA amateur extra morsemen do is 'quitefine.'

Really? That's NOT been my experience over the last half century in the Los Angeles Aerospace Industry. I've NEVER been hired by any mechanical engineers...the final interview before a hiring okay has ALWAYS been done by EEs.

>Aerospace engineering is a branch of mechanical >engineering (we don't get to drop the lesser terms in the equations since >they have a significant impact for our field).

Really? Rocketdyne (my last big corporate employer) makes the SSME (Space Shuttle Main Engine). A rocket motor (simple) might need a spark plug or other igniter to start it up (if not using hypergolic fuel). However, each SSME has a STRAP-ON COMPUTER, primarily to regulate the liquid oxygen flow.
Can't use a conventional flowmeter...the LOX just eats them up (rapid oxidation from pure oxygen). Since the SSME is throttleable there's a wide range of variables involved, something that can only be solved in real time by a computer.
Computer was designed and built by Minneapolis-Honeywell and is probably the MOST robust computer ever made. Perhaps you want to argue that Rocketdyne is "not" involved in aerospace engineering? [feel free, but you would be WRONG]

If you go a bit north of Rocketdyne in Canoga Park, CA, you would reach Hughes Aircraft Missle Division. Nice place.
I worked there when Ramo-Wooldridge occupied that facility.
Stouffers ran both the RW and HAC cafeteria, good good food.
Is the Phoenix air-air missle considered part of "aerospace?"
I'd say so, and thousands of other engineers would say so.

However, for a missle there is a STRONG interplay between the tin benders and solder slingers to get an optimum package with the most bang for its buck...and get it to the target RELIABLY. HAC has had an excellent record in air-air misslery, beginning with their first, the GAR-1 and GAR-2 (launched from F-102s, Shrub's NG plane). Air-air missles NEED little computers on board along with air data sensors and control acuators to do their task. A mechanical who specializes in aerodynamics is certainly needed but those would be out of a job without the electronics specialist working side-by-side.

Would a satellite or space probe work without solar cells?
[only for a short time] Solar cells are ELECTRICAL things, charging up the internal batteries (another electrical thing) to keep the payload (electronics) working. Feel free to go out to JPL and tell them "aerospace is all mechanical engineering." :-)

I could expand on avionics...stuff that acquires and tracks targets (military) or guides aircraft (military and civilian) or does "fly-by-wire" (control surface acuation via electrical coupling from manual controls). Absolutely needed in the high-performance aircraft of today. But, you say that is due to "aerospace being all mechanical engineering?" No.
Have you seen the "glass cockpit" of today's aircraft?
Gone are the mechanical and aerodynamic gauges, replaced with flat-screen LCD and Plasma displays operated through microprocessors from sensors with no moving parts.

>Again we go hire the electrical engineers.

Nonsense.

>Same with civil and structural engineers.

More nonsense. "Civil engineers?" Building rigid airships? :-)

>On the >other hand electrical engineers generally do not study basic pressure vessal >theory but go hire the mechanical engineers for that.

I might have had some past jobs that made me a 'vassal' but at Rocketdyne I never had any responsibility for pressure VESSLES. That was for the smoke-and-fire guys to do. :-)

By the way, the almost-catastrophy of the Apollo 13 mission was a LOX tank blowing up in the Service Module. Specifially it was failure of the LOX stirring thermostate within it, a design responsibility of mechanicals with thermodynamics specialty. :-) [one of three VESSLES holding LOX in the Service Module]

Tsk, tsk. Bad school. Sit in corner. :-)

>We didn't study Ohms law and the electrical >engineers didn't study cantilever beam theory.

Really? "Beam theory" (cantilever and others) was a REQUISITE in southern California colleges; most instructors prolly couldn't hack the basic electrical stuff anyway. Ever look into a Texas Instruments 'DLP' IC? CANTILEVER BEAM MOVEMENT of the micromachined mirrors does every single lil' pixel in that IC.
TI has a virtual monopoly on the DLP for very large screen DTV displays.

One need not use 'cantilever beam theory' to design a horizontal ham antenna (such as a parasitic beam)...just go out and BUY one, ready-made, some-assembly-required, then watch it fall down in the next big windstorm. :-)

As far as actual KNOWLEDGE gained, a 'degree' has LITTLE value except in the eyes of personnel departments and department managers (the ones who think they can run people but sure don't know how to run the equipment). I finally got one...LONG AFTER the fact of having quite a bit of design responsibility and a whole heaping gob of experience.
Personally, I feel mine is a negative worth due to lots of LOST time attending 'requisite' classes...just so a few instructors could write down I passed their courses and a few others in a college (or university) could rubber-stamp a 'sheepskin.'

The point is BEING ABLE TO DO THE JOB, not the number of diplomas (suitable for framing) on display, or the number of alphabetic characters one can put after a signature.

Does anyone NEED a radio license to effectively run, repair, maintain, calibrate, test a radio transmitter? NO.
The license is a LEGAL requirement. The TEST for any radio license, amateur or commercial, is ridiculously SIMPLE, and has NEVER been made complex or comprehensive by the FCC. It is an AUTHORIZATION by a government agency,
NOT a "qualification". It might as well be a fancy hunting or fishing license.

However, the FCC regulations for radio amateurs is strict on technical performance, a responsibility for EACH licensee. Can you do any sort of comprehensive test to insure compliance with the LAW? I can. I could long before any degree was received.

Amateur Radio is about much more than "communicating with people from around the world".

Amateur Radio is about LEARNING !!! LEARNING some physics, learning about sunspots, learning about antennas, learning about propagation, learning about some electronics, learning about digital communication techniques, learning about VHF propagation, learning about microwaves, learning about wide band tv systems, learning about narrow band tv systems, learning about ... [you complete the phrase].

If you just want to talk around the world, use CB. If you just want to talk around town, use FRS. If you want to LEARN about radio become an Amateur Radio operator [make a commitment to LEARN].

You forgot the most important part....
How about helping out the rest of the world in emergencies?

After any disaster, the first comunications out of the effected area comes from hams. NOHA gets a lot of there hurricane information from hams in the affected area. Sometimes while the ham op is in the middle of it.

When all else fails...we are there!!!!
Been there, done that Never been a problem to me.

I can't see any personal enjoyment in "contesting," using kilodollars worth of equipment just to accumulate the most radio contacts in a short period of time. But, if that's your Thing, go for it.

I started out in HF radio with the mission of keeping communications channels open and working 24/7. Not my thing to hop all over some small band and making transitory contact with some individual one will probably never "work" again. I put that on par with being a fan of "Wheel of Fortune." :-)

The FCC has nothing on "contesting," doesn't require it of any licensee.

Tsk. VHF-UHF is LOS stuff regularly, sometimes "DX" when there are atmospheric inversion layers for ducting or other weird effects.

Did it ever occur to you that OTHER people on ham bands are NOT really into 'contesting?" Maybe they LIKE to get to know the other party on a radio circuit?

>The ITU has a standard definition of what constitutes International Morse

It's a date-update of an old CCITT TELEGRAM standard.

Would you like a copy? :-)

IT DOES NOT SPECIFY WORD RATE!

>They say we must pass the International Morse Code.

The FCC references the CCITT-ITU document in Definitions.

The FCC does NOT LEGALLY DEFINE word rate.

Sunnuvagun.

Now, if the FCC ever gets the 2004 "Omnibus" R&O published in the Federal Register, we will see if they bothered to update the old CCITT document to the current ITU document.

>Most engineering jobs do not require that one even have a PE license or >registration or whatever they call it these days.

'Professional Engineer' is a STATE license thing. Requirements vary between states, but not a great deal.

The state PE license is a nice LEGAL thing because the LEGAL system is set up to recognize it.

Corporations and businesses who DO THE WORK are less interested in the number of diplomas and licenses one has...they want people who can DO THE WORK. If they can DO THE WORK, they are paid accordingly. Getting PAID for services rendered IS a legally-acceptible definition of 'professional' activity. Ergo, an engineer who does engineering work, has engineering responsibility, and CAN DO THE WORK is generally referred to as a professional. Really.

But, but, but...an amateur MUST learn morse code?!? :-)

Lots of amateurs tossed their code keys, had "key burial" ceremonies after getting their license, and continued to have fun as licensed amateurs.

There's lots and lots of hypocrisy running around loose in there... :-(

>One needs to >learn the basics as they don't yet know what direction their hobby will take

In crowded, congested ham bands it would seem mo' bettah
to LEARN how to maintain, repair, calibrate their radios.
The FCC has lots technical requirements on radios which licensees are REQUIRED to obey.

Not to worry. The ready-built designer-manufacturers of today's ham radios have done all the ADVANCED work for you.
No need to sweat actually LEARNING some beyond-basic knowledge. Just plug it in and go. You can read the operating manual as you go along.

You keep stressing the NEED to do radiotelegraphy. I don't see it. The rest of the world isn't stressing any of that
"CW" need...they just gave up on morse code.

>years) writing engineering software using Fortran and later Visual Basic.

Sunnuvagun! In 1973 I managed to access the RCA corporate mainframe to do my first FORTRAN coding. I got the basics from Dan McCracken's large softcover on Programming in FORTRAN IV. 33 years ago! Took me only about three months (of my own time) to get acquainted with FORTRAN...was much more difficult 'selling' the group bean counter to get access. By 1975 I had 6 programs in the RCA Central Software Library that I'd written and debugged. Wasn't all that hard.

Oh, and Dartmouth BASIC was already in industry use 33 years ago. Visual Basic hasn't been out near that long.
Power Basic for Windows 8 is the present package I have, sufficiently like FORTRAN to make an easy transition.

Computer programming is NOT for everyone. Some haven't got the aptitude for it. Programming does NOT teach one how to MAKE a computer, just how to USE it in ONE kind of application. [like morse proficiency is "supposed to make one a good radio operator" but doesn't teach squat in how a radio works or how to fix one]

What is much better for radio amateurs OR just radio and electronics hobbyists in regards to basic theory knowledge is using a SPICE program set. Linear Technology Corp. has made a modern SPICE program set absolutely FREE, just download it at www.linear.com. "LTSpice/SwitcherCAD." Use the Search box at the home page. The single download is an automatically-unpacking .EXE file, just run it and it installs by itself. It's got a fairly simple Schematic drawing feature that automatically generates Netlists. A fair selection of common active device models is supplied in its Library. Only for Windows OS up to XP as far as I know.

SPICE program packages ALL take some time on the learning curve. The lovely part of them is that they do NOT require parts, NO workbench, NO test equipment. At first they are frustrating in a large amount of program commands and conventions that must be observed. Once over that hump, they can be marvelous instruction machines in allowing quick changes of a circuit to see the effect on Transient (time-domain) or Linear AC (frequency-domain) response. They can handle simple, medium, or large scale circuits...anything from just an R-C network to fancy oscillators to complex filters, passive or active.

In working on a "SPICE bench" there is a subtle input to the mind. The pathways there are opened to first understand the interrelationships of components in a circuit...and what those components are made of, electrically. Once those pathways are opened, it becomes easier to understand the more complex theory behind the circuitry. All that can be done without lots of expensive (or cheap) parts, no danger of "burning out" something, no smoke and fire. :-)

"All electronics works by smoke. If the smoke leaks out, it won't work." - anon.

Heh heh heh heh...Morsepersons are SUPERIOR to ordinaries.

The morsepersons had to test for morse code so everyone else damn well had to test for it too! :-)

Yawn...just another day in RRAP where the SUPERIOR ones look down their paddles at the mundane mortals...AS IF they were

What's to know? Follow the little lines, right? And a soldering

That must be why the GROL exam was lifted from the Amateur Advanced Exam (minus the amateur rules and CW req't).

I was part of the big RRAP CW and anti-ARRL fights of the late 90's up until restructuring went into effect, then my posting tapered off. I'll disappear again once the FCC totally kills off ham radio by eliminating the code requirement. When that happens, I'll wear a strip of black electricians tape around my arm in memorial and observe twenty-four hours of radio silence in memory of a once proud service.

Rest in Peace, Ham Radio. You were a good and faithful friend.

You don't cut wood for winter, forage the woods for berries, turn the crank on a model T, build spears to kill a deer, wash clothes in a river, or make candles to light the night, why would you want to make your own stamps? Just collect them, no CW test required.

Try not to drool on the sticky side.

You haven't passed an exam for the most basic amateur radio hunting and fishing license, old timer.

You don't have to worry about doing so. You aren't involved.

Heck no, Leonard. You'd have to first obtain an amateur radio license in order to worry about amateur radio contesting.

Some folks use hundreds of dollars worth of equipment. Some participate only to work states or countries or grid squares they've never contacted. Some like to give points to those operating seriously in a contesting event. Some just like to see if they can't beat the score of a local friend or to see if they can do better than they did the last year.

In this weekend's CQ Worldwide DX Contest, serious ops likely contacted the same station on a number of bands. They likely worked most of those stations on a number of bands last year and the year before. Don't worry too much about it. You'd have to obtain an amateur radio license before you could participate.

Weird effects? Most of the propagation modes are fairly predictable, Len. Line of sight varies with altitude above average terrain, with height of antennas above ground, with gain of antennas used, with power used and with feedline and preamps used. Enhanced propagation modes exist commonly. I can regularly contact 6m stations within a several hundred mile radius. At 2m and 70cm, I can work stations two hundred or so miles away. With enhanced propagation modes at 2m or 70cm, I've worked Iowa and Nebraska. I've contacted 67 countries on 6m in the past six years. They range from the Marshall Islands to Madagascar.

Being a contester does not preclude ragchewing or DXing or traffic handling.

Yeah. "We" will see. Those of us with amateur radio licenses will operate under the reg changes. You may read them.

Fix up your well equipped home workshop, Len. Get it all set up for maintenance, repair and calibration. That way, you can go right to it when and if you ever obtain an amateur radio license.

That has long been evident.

That's incorrect, Leonard. The rest of the world didn't give up the use or the testing. Some countries gave up testing. In the meantime, if you'd like to become a radio amateur with HF access here in the U.S. of A., you'll need to brush up on morse.

Neither is amateur radio, Len, for the same reason.

What about the rest of the world you fruitcake? In reality, with the rest of the world not requiring code, what you predict in your myopic little views should already be taking place. HF knows no political boundaries. Answer why HF is not already a wasteland, fucktard.

After a while, Dee, you hit Dayton and other hamfests and you meet some of these contest ops. I've been working Mike Wetzel W9RE for thirty years or so in contests. I've known Tim K3LR since he was a teenager.
He and WA3FET designed the Bencher Skyhawk tribander in recent years.

Back in 1990 when I was 9L1US in Sierra Leone, I worked Don Karvonen K8MFO on ten bands within a 24 hour period (and not in a contest). Don and I were on Market Reef in 1986.

Is it that you can't help fulfilling the profile, Len? You see the job of another as something of which to ridicule.

Any radio amateur license holder is superior to you in amateur radio,

I'd be honked too if I didn't have a chance to familiarize myself with the mode.

Yeah, funny how government stations don't have licenses and don't require operator licenses. Go figure!

That's right. That's what the FCC says and, as you've pointed out, the FCC rules amateur radio in this country.

Yet despite your feelings, morse testing goes on. Amateur radio goes on. Morse Code operation goes on. I can almost feel your pain.

Wrap yourself in bunting and tell us a riveting tale of what it is like to go through an artillery barrage, Len. Did that take place in Japan during the 1950's? Can your friend Gene confirm it?

if you were reading youd understand that the point made is that the needs of CW Contester do (and should not) drive ARS licensing

or maybe you would not be able to understand that point

We already know that Letterman is anti-gay. He banned Richard Simmons from his show after spraying Simmons with a CO2 fire extinguisher to drive him off stage. Simmons was so upset that they had to call an ambulance after the incident.

Simmons was foolish, of course, and let Letterman talk him into doing things like dressing as Cupid and swinging onto the stage from a cable running over to the balcony. That's Letterman's style: Take advantage of Simmons' desire for publicity while openly making fun of Simmons' sexual preference. By extension, Letterman was ridiculing all gay men.

I'll bet that he's afraid of straight guys like O'Reilly who won't let themselves be pushed around. That's probably what was REALLY making Letterman angry.

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

You mean the Technician? If so, they are a considerable amount less than half.

40% is more like it.

That's not a given at all.

Remember the ARRL survey that was debated so much here? It showed that less than 40% of those hams who were asked never used Morse Code. And it included licensees from all license classes, not just those who had passed code tests.

Sure there are those who learned just enough to pass the Morse Code test and then never used it - just as there are those who just enough to pass the written tests and then never used it

Heck, your buddy Len couldn't even get the length of a 73 MHz quarter-wave whip antenna right, and he's a "PROFESSIONAL"!
> So put all USA licensed amateurs in fron of a station equipped with a

I presume you mean "contest scores"

Why?

Who is going to set up and pay for all those stations? What sort of stations would they be - HF, VHF, UHF? What sort of antennas, rigs, computers?

Any ham who wants to operate Morse Code using CWGet or some other software can do so right now - if they have a station that includes rig, antenna, and computer.

Yet I don't know of any amateur radio contesters who operate that way. Do you?

Your "thought experiment" doesn't seem to be thought out very well.

Now here's a real challenge:

The ARRL November CW Sweepstakes is this coming weekend. I'm going to operate in it, using my homebrew 100 watt station and antenna. No CWGet here.

How about we compare your score with mine a week from now?

Or how about this one:

Field Day 2007
Entry class 1B-1 (one transmitter, one operator).

The challenge is to assemble, transport, set up, operate, and take down a complete FD station - singlehanded, no outside help - and make the highest score.

Field Day location must not be owned by the participant and must not be a licensed amateur station location. Field Day location must be located in a place under FCC jurisdiction.

All equipment used must be legitimately owned by the operator.

All FCC regulations and ARRL rules that apply to Field Day must be complied with by all involved. Results report must be submitted to ARRL before the deadline.

Highest official score wins.

I've done better than 3000 points under such conditions. Can you?

How was it "dumbing down" to eliminate the Conditional?

Actually it cost FCC a lot of money to do testing.

First off, they had to have offices with test facilities. The office they had in Philadelphia back when I took my exams was on the 10th floor of the Custom House at 2nd and Chestnut. Lots of square feet of prime real estate just for the exam room.

Then there was the time of the examiners, all of whom worked for FCC.
Pay and benefits. At least two people per office, three days a week.
Times the number of offices all over the country.

Then add the FCC folks who revised the exams, duplicated them, and distributed them to the various offices all over the country. And the cost of doing all that.

The VE system eliminated all that expense. All FCC has to do now wrt amateur license testing is to look over the QPC submissions and approve them. And occasionally retest somebody.

Eliminating Element 1 will not save the FCC any expense. Keeping it will not cost them anything, either. Maybe that's why it's taking them so long.

You're presuming she's not doing what needs to be done, and is dependent on someone else to deal with the theory. I don't think that's the case at all.

Hmmm?

I've put up antennas with W3RV. Or rather, I helped out a little, since he had it all worked out on his own. No sisters involved.

He does know quite a lot about antennas, particularly the practical side. He even knows that a quarter wave at 73 MHz is a lot longer than three and one quarter inches....

Wait and see.

ARRL November CW Sweepstakes starts Saturday afternoon and ends Sunday night. I'll be there - will you?

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh
since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

I've got one of those.

What funny ideas?

All I did was point out that when someone wanted to change the zoning in your neighborhood, you opposed that change. You wanted to keep out anyone who did not want the kind of house you lived in. You wanted a piece of undeveloped land to stay undeveloped, even though you did not own it.

You wanted The Government to keep your neighborhood As It Was When You Moved There. By force of law. Newcomers must conform to what you wanted the neighborhood to be. They had to change, not you.

The irony is that when the land was finally developed, the resulting houses were worth more than yours!

I would expect you to say something like that.

The one where as a member, I did not receive a ballot?

The one that Mike Deignan characterized as "substantive?"

Yes, I recall the survey. Looked as if it had been developed by a bunch of dems hoping to influence the outcome of an election.

Add to that those who rarely used code.

"professional."

Why not? They're operating in a CW Contest. Why wouldn't you total their scores?

Think about it.

The Morsemen can bandy about the CQ WW and Field Day CW vs SSB contest scores all they want without having to standardize station equipment.
I bring up a scenario and NOW station equipment must be standardized.

There's some bias in your approach.

Yep. I can finally agree with something you said.

> Yet I don't know of any amateur radio contesters who operate that way.
> Do you?

Nobody knew of anyone who operated amateur radio as in Larry Rolls
"Only CW can save the situation" but I NEVER ONCE saw your objection to
it.

I bring up a scenario and NOW you have a problems with how contestors operate.

There's some bias in your approach.

> Your "thought experiment" doesn't seem to be thought out very well.

Sure it was.

Alternative scenario snipped.

Jeez you're thick. It was dumbing down to create such a license class.

It was the travel distance that was key in the creation of the Conditional license, not the desire for the FCC to save money. Try to stay on the subject.

That's all wunnerful, but you vectored off of the subject. Maybe next time you'll be able to cut and paste something germane to the subject.

Maybe. But they didn't even make the effort to define Morse Code in the rules for the last 3 R&Os. Yet they tell you that the exam myst be 5WPM, and you've got all these VEs getting to define what that means.

hjs...@cs.com said:
"Removing the code requirement at this late date would do little to increase the number of hams applying for a license. "

To which M...@kb9rqz.aprs responded:
"but it can help retain those we get "

And hjs...@cs.com said:
"I see that you real(sp) as well as you spell, which is not very good.
I was responding to the following: "but it can help retain those we get"

And M...@kb9rqz.aprs said:
"the only one that thinks the poster are sufggesting code testing will retain anything is you and where you get is beyond me"

If M...@kb9rqz.aprs will take the time to read the threaded responses
he will understand how the thread unfolded.

If you mean just SWLs discussing various aspects of the radio hobby on rec.radio.shortwave, well, let's hope so. The code/no code discussion got boring years ago. Or perhaps it's the posters who are boring. Either way, the crossposters from rec.radio.amateur groups make up the bulk of my killfile.

HUH? Morse is Morse regardless if it is done with a key, a Navy ship's lamp, a flashlight, or it is pecked out with a hammer or stick!! ... --- ...! It DID save someone's life and a sinking boat...well, maybe not the boat!;)

If someone taps out code, it may not be Continuous Wave Telegraphy, but it is still the same principle.

For those of you who find CW a bit tedious to decode this way it says:

Slow Code needs to think about his arguments.

The ARRL is not trying to kill CW but keep ham radio alive.

His ideas would kill ham radio and his beloved CW with it.

I agree - learning something about amateur radio is a requirement for passing the test. The real question is what kinds of knowlege about amateur radio should be required of prospective hams before giving them a license. It would seem to me that testing a prospective ham for knowlege of how radios operate, how to set up a station properly and how to operate the equipment safely would be a primary concern. Next the ham should be able to demonstrate an ability to use the equipment to communicate in an efficient and courteous manner in a mode that is widely used. Voice is hands down the most frequently used mode of communication. Additionally, a knowlege of how to communicate via radio using voice would be a big help when trying to make contact during an emergency with professional rescue groups. Having the prospective ham learn morse code would not provide him with a skill that has any real world use.

Explosion Blows Out Back of Marshall Co. House
Posted Friday, October 13, 2006 ; 10:19 PM

Glen Dale man homeless, Friday, after explosion.

Story by Pam Hoffer

A Glen Dale man is homeless, tonight, after the back of his home exploded just before five o'clock. It happened at 610 Glenhaven Avenue. Glendale Police say the back of a home blew off after there was a gas accumulation inside the bathroom. Firefighters say a fan burned up and overheated, sparking the fire and blowing out the back side of the house. The owner was found wandering around his back yard, covered in toilet paper, pantless, and in a daze. The owner of the home, R.L. Wiseman, said that his toilet had been stopped up for a couple of days and that he was unable to get any plumbers to fix the problem. Wiseman said he'd had gas accumulations in the past, but not quite to this extent. To make matters worse, Wiseman said he did not have homeowners insurance so everything is a total loss. Now the home is not stable and authorities have to determine what they're going to do next. In the meantime, Wiseman is sleeping in his car.

"Big Brother" thinking a la George Orwell. :-)

NO code test for an amateur radio license means FREEDOM for amateur radio hobbyists to pursue the OPTION that the FCC gives all licensed operators...the OPTION of using any allocated mode in any band below 30 MHz.

YOU demand that all newcomers wanting below-30-MHz privileges MUST take that code test...because it was always done. THAT is the "hive mind," Mother, straight out of the olde-tymer ARRL's hymnbook.

What is so "sacred" about having to take that code test for below-30-MHz operating privileges? You keep on and on and on and on and on about that...yet every other radio service doesn't require that. Ah, but your RATIONALIZATION (that is all it is) is that amateur radio is somehow "special" and MUST continue to do as it has always done, keep on with federal testing for morse code telegraphy. Virtual enslavement to the ideas of long-ago radio amateurs who just couldn't keep up with the times and change.

The emotional necessity you have for some nebulous
'tradition' to keep that code test is just self-defined bullshit. Why are YOU so damn special that YOUR demands MUST be met by others? Ego? Delusions of god-hood?
Are you a Controller, Mother? You have a NEED to CONTROL others? Why are you against letting others choose for themselves?

>> It might be that >> doesn't understand 'reality.'
>> He says he "lives in the ham bands."

Mother, quit that annoying habit. You know damn well what YOU meant.

Ah, but do you LIVE in one? :-)

>> He has
>> funny ideas of zoning laws and how they affect hundreds

>What funny ideas?

YOURS, Mother. This newsgroup is NOT about local zoning laws. This newsgroup is NOT about real estate. This newsgroup is NOT about local tax laws.

YOU live roughly 3000 miles away (if you call that living)
and do NOT participate in my neighborhood association, haven't even met or even know about the neighborhood, but you damn well HAVE to intrude and lecture me, bore everyone else about an incidental NON-AMATEUR-RADIO thing.

Tsk, your whole point of that was just Character
Assassination of me. :-) Since it didn't work, you MUST keep on and on and on and on with it. It's about the only 'weapon' you have in your tiny arsenal to fight against elimination of the code test. :-)

>Not me, Len. I'm not about hate.
>I'm all about justice, fair play, common sense, and accuracy.

Tsk, it must be Election Time since you are sounding just like every bullshit-politician who ever ran. :-)

Are you running for some kind of "office" in amateur radio? You want to CONTROL hams and enslave them to YOUR politics? Sure sounds like it.

"Accuracy:" Are you still saying that ENIAC was "the first electronic computer?" [it's not an amateur radio subject since ENIAC never did any computing for amateur radio] Are you going against a Federal Court decision about that? Good luck and I hope you get admitted to the Bar so you can re-argue that 1970s decision.

"Common sense:" The FCC gives all amateurs the OPTION of using any allocated mode in any allocated band. Yet you demand that the morse code test be required for any radio amateur desiring below-30-MHz privileges...even though the FCC has stated at least three times in public (beginning in 1990) that it sees no value for their licensing purposes. The FCC is the one with the NPRM on deleting that code test. YOUR idea of "common sense" is apparently a strict obediance to whatever the ARRL says. :-)

"Fair play:" As long as everyone in here agrees with your desires as a PCTA amateur extra, they are "fair." If they disagree, your "fair play" vanishes. You then become the ruler-whipping Mother Superior intent on character-assassination. Tsk, we've all seen that.

"Justice:" Wow, what a concept! The PCTA concept of "justice" is simply Do As We Say! Keep the code test forever and ever even if the REASONS for it have evaporated long ago. Keep The Code Test because all the PCTA had to take one and everyone else had damn well take one, too!

>Accuracy, Len. You can't just push the facts down the memory hole.

You mean like "pushing" FACTS of a Federal Court decision in regards to your beloved ENIAC not accepted as a "first?" :-)

Mother, the ARRL is NOT the sole purveyor of radio history. There are other sources, but you keep trying to push ONLY the ARRL "facts" up people's hole.

>In reality, a quarter-wave whip antenna is a lot longer than 3 and 1/4 >inches.

Not at 731 MHz. :-)

Mother Superior, PUT DOWN THE RULER. I did correct my typo of accidental shifting of the apostrophe key.

Okay, you have just TOSSED OUT your "accuracy" and "fair play" in favor of manufactured Character Assassination. You are going to DWELL on that typo WITHOUT acknowledging my own correction.

Standard Operating Procedure for you, Mother.

>Do you mean that I point out your mistakes?

That's about ALL you do to my postings, Mother. :-)

You love playing the prissy pedant and get amnesia when you GET CORRECTED ON YOUR OWN MISTAKES! :-)

Does too much morse code affect your short-term memory?
Give you selective amnesia? Increase your imagination?

>> A sort of junior-league Major Dud (Robeson) now.
>Did you ever find the database that says whether or not he was in the >US military?

There are databases showing who was NOT in the military?!?

Where? If there were, YOU would be on one! :-)

You have NEVER served in any military, yet your own quaint sense of "justice, fair play, common sense, and accuracy" MAKES you "correct" anyone about anything military? Hey, no problem, you can get support for replacing the Secretary of Defense any time from other PCTA! You can then replace the MARS Directive and say "hams run MARS!" :-)

Want to see a digitized copy of my DD-214, Mother? I'm sure you would considering your sense of "justice, fair play, common sense, and ACCURACY." I might even add a copy of my Honorable Discharge; I would have to go get it from the Safety Deposit box at the bank, but it would be for "justice, fair play, common sense, and accuracy." Those are two documents which YOU will NEVER have.

Does YOUR concept of "justice, fair play, common sense, and accuracy" ALLOW some bullshitters to claim military service even if they haven't produced ONE documentary PROOF of it for years? Yes, I'm sure it does as long as they champion morse code testing for amateur licenses. You seem to love and condone anyone who is against NCTAs.

Gotta love that "justice, fair play, common sense, and accuracy" of yours, Mother. Right up there with all the dictators of human history. You keep up the good work of 1906 thinking in the year 2006.

It's not code requirements or tests that is keeping (and driving) good

I can work the UK on 40 phone now without going split. They can use 7040-7200 now. OTOH, who knows when the broadcasters will ever move?

It's a complete crock about protecting the DX. The answer for ragchewers has always been to use a band that isn't open to where you want to be protected from, i.e. don't ragchew on an open band unless you want DX (meaning in this case US hams) to ask to join the QSO (some actually like it when that happens, you know). It's not really hard for them to find a band that isn't open to the US.

Armed forced?

Our military isn't perfect. Many of those who enlist aren't all that sharp. Most are shoved into a career field in which they have no interest. Most aren't going to make the military a career. Some are lucky enough to have skills obtained prior to military service. Some of those are fortunate enough to serve in a field in which they have some expertise or interest.

Yes, Lackland AFB is in San Antonio. Amarillo AFB was in Amarillo.
That's where I went through basic training. Amarillo. Amarillo.

Anyone can teach a class licensed or not, but an Extra (actually 3 Extras) must proctor the Extra exam.

Welp, good breeding keeps me from doing what Robesin does. And Robesin wasn't stopped until someone out-assholed him. All Mark asked for was an apology for being called a rapist. Robesin couldn't do that.

KH2D and I used to chat on a dead band; 10 meters. Then someone from Africa would break in for a QSO

You are mistaken, Brian.

The Technician license does not make up 49.5% of US hams. The total of Technicians and Technician Pluses reaches about that level. (All Technician Pluses are Morse Code tested).

In addition, many hams whose licenses say "Technician" are code tested and have some HF privileges. These include:

- all Tech Pluses who have renewed since April 15, 2000
- all Novices who have upgraded to Technician

- all Technicians who have passed Element 1, but not the written exam
for General

btw, no US amateur radio license is "code-free". All of them can use Morse Code.

You mean like this:

reaking_news/15869924.htm

btw, next Tuesday I get to choose between Curt Weldon and Joe Sestak.
Which do you think I should vote for?

Why?

Even if someone rarely uses it, that means they still remember it and can use it at some level.

You are mistaken.

You've repeatedly claimed that I mis-stated the distance from Earth to the moon on rrap.
Show us where I did that - if you can.

I don't think you can, because it did not happen. If I did it, show us.

Otherwise you're just making things up.

> and you're a "professional."

I've never claimed to be a professional astronomer.

Len claims to be a "PROFESSIONAL in radio-electronics" (whatever that is) but he messes up on the length of an antenna for a radio service he has claimed to use.

I did. That's why I'm asking the question.

Do you think the taxpayers should subsidize amateur radio stations?

Who said anything about standardizing station equipment? Not me.

I simply want to know where all those stations are supposed to come from.

So a version of the experiment you describe can happen in every contest. But it doesn't.

So what? I don't read everything written to rrap. Larry hasn't posted here in years.

Not at all.

I just don't see anyone using CWGet to operate a contest - even though they could. Heck you could. Why don't you?

Why? Aren't you up to such a simple challenge? Here it is again:

Field Day 2007.

Entry class 1B-1 (one transmitter, one operator).

The challenge is to assemble, transport, set up, operate, and take down a complete FD station - singlehanded, no outside help - and make the highest score.

Field Day location must not be owned by the participant and must not be a licensed amateur station location. Station location must be under FCC jurisdiction.

All equipment used must be legitimately owned by the operator.

All FCC regulations and ARRL rules that apply to Field Day must be complied with by all involved.

Results report must be submitted to ARRL before the deadline. Highest official score wins.

A simple, real-world challenge. What's the problem?

No, Brian, I'm not "thick". You just did a poor job of explaining.

Why? The Conditional and its predecessor Class C go back to before the FCC.

I was writing about the reason the FCC stopped doing license testing for all license classes. That's part of the reduction in requirements.

I am on the subject. You're trying to change it.

Nope.

The subject was the reduction in license requirements by FCC giving over the testing to VEs.

Why should they? Is there any doubt?

We were different because we could communicate with each other in morse.
If code is eliminated there won't be anything unique anymore. Someone making an effort to learn code was also viewed has someone who most likely went out of their way to learn other things too, but now people look at the no codes and they don't see anything special there.

They have that freedom now, Len.

You do not.

I don't "demand", Len. I simply think that a code test is a good idea for all amateur radio licenses.

I also think the written tests could be improved.

> .because it was always done.

Nope. Wrong. You've made yet another mistake.

I think the Morse Code test is a good idea for many reasons, but "because it was always done" isn't one of them.

> out of the olde-tymer ARRL's hymnbook.

You're just plain wrong, Len.

Nothing sacred about it, Len.

It's just a good idea. In fact, I think amateur radio would be better off if all amateur licenses required a Morse Code test. That's just my opinion.

> You keep on and

So what? Amateur radio is different. If it wasn't, there would be no need for it to be a separate radio service.

No, that's not true at all, Len. You've made yet another mistake.

You mean like somebody who insists that zoning ordinances must never be changed to allow different land uses?

Y'know, Len, it's easy to tell when you've lost the debate. You tell us all by the way you go ballistic, start cussing and SHOUTING and using derogatory nicknames and cuss words.

The fact is that you have no tolerance for opinions different from yours.

Ask yourself that question, Len.

> Ego? Delusions of god-hood?

See? There you go!

I'm just expressing my opinion, Len. I think a Morse Code test is a good thing for Amateur Radio. In fact, I think it would be better if all radio amateurs had to pass such a test.

You were the one who wanted to prevent people under the age of 14 from getting amateur licenses.

You were the one who wanted to prevent development of land you did not own, just because it was near your house.

You are the one spamming ECFS with hundreds of pages of commentary, even though you are not involved in amateur radio at all.

Who is trying to be the controller, Len?

Len, if you claim someone wrote something here, you should be able to back up that claim. Seems to me you can't do that.

You've stooped to misquoting me for some reason. Why? All my posts are in the archives - if I wrote something, a direct quote would be easy to find.

I think you know that you are wrong, and are trying to evade the truth.

I don't think everyone else is bored by my postings.

The fact is that you have done exactly what you accuse others of doing: resisting change, trying to keep others out, holding to old ways, etc.

Almost every claim you have made about those who support Morse Code testing can be used to describe your actions toward a simple zoning change.

Can't kill something that doesn't exist ;-) ;-) ;-)

What did I write about your zoning change that wasn't true, Len?

It's a clear and valid analogy. You're the outsider trying to force your way on a community where you have no investment. Just like an outside developer trying to build in your neighborhood - except that the developer invested lots of time, money and effort into the neighborhood.

Not to anyone who has any sense.

You've made another mistake, Len.

ENIAC was the world's very first fully operational, high speed, general purpose, electronic digital computer.

That's what I've repeatedly written, but you misquote me.

> [it's not an amateur radio

How do you know for sure?

> Are you going against a Federal Court decision

The court decision was about the patents, and the attempt to monopolize the computer industry.

If you think the ABC machine was an electronic computer in any real sense, then you really don't know what the words mean. All it could do was solve systems of linear equations - it didn't even have a conditional jump instruction. It was a specialized calculator, not a true computer.

See the chart in:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Eniac

That's true. Or they can come up with new modes, document them, and FCC will allow the new modes as well.

I don't "demand" that, Len. I just think it's a good idea. And not just for HF but for all radio amateurs.

FCC has stated all sorts of things, btw. Doesn't mean they are always right. Do you think BPL is a good thing? FCC seems to think it is.

If FCC is so against Morse Code testing, why wasn't the test just dropped in the summer of 2003? All it would take is a Memorandum Report and Order.

> The FCC is the one with the NPRM

Then why are you so upset? You're not involved. You're not part of Amateur Radio, and it's pretty clear you never will be.

Heck no, Len. ARRL wants the Morse Code test kept only for Extra. I want it for all radio amateurs.

ENIAC was the world's very first fully operational, high speed, general purpose, electronic
digital computer.

That's a fact.

Nobody says it is, Len.

But when it comes to facts, you sure come up short.

Len. IOW, pointing out their mistakes. You make so many mistakes here that it can be difficult to keep up!

Yep - and creativity, too. All sorts of good things. You wouldn't know about them, of course.

Why should anyone have to provide you with proof, Len?

Can't you find the database K8MN referenced?

You claim to know who served in the US military and who didn't. Yet it seems you can't find proof on your own.

Why should anyone provide you with proof of their military service?

what delusions If the post is of a real newsstory then the reposter has comitted a crime in reposting it.

If as is more likely it is fraud then the crime of fraud has been comitted

either way the original poster is a criminal and motivated most likely by a desire to cause Wismen to return and cause more trouble, IOW the crime of maclious mischeive and as Wismen has made deaths as recently as friday that is another felony charge

Oh my! You really outdid yourself with that one! And my Mom? Wow, she's 79.
Dude must really want some company.

The hell with CW. Let's all learn binary code and use it instead. Hell, we'll even be digital then!

only if they are willing to violate the law, JIM I do not and if you have your way never will have that freedom

I spent 5 years trying very very hard to get it. I have little (if anything) to show for that effort.

in most form of law something become permenet or impossible if attemped for a full year from the ProCode side we see NO room for anything exhalations to work and slave I am certain I have put far more effort on code along than you put into in ALL of your licensure(not your day to day haming)

no the world is not fair and while in principle my satus even if I am the only american should allow for an exception it seems I am far from alone I recall reading of someone spending 10 years and finaly making it. why is such effort justified for the option to never use it again esp in a world where Computers can if not operate the mode WELL (how well they do it is debated) can certainly operate the mode better than I (and others) ever would be

would you ask a man with with hearing problem not to use a hearing aid to take the code test he can't do the deed without it? then why deny me and others our right use your pcs or other devices that allow to use Morse Coded CW

I have operated quite abit on machine Morsed CW . did a lot sending practice stuff for my firend working on the higher code speed required in 1997- 99. anybody that can could follow my typing with zero proofing (instead of the minimal proofing here on RRAP) could pass a test . OTOH I found I could read there "buig sent stuff fairly well certainly enough for my brain which is used to seeing text in a distorted manner could follow indeed during this code practice on 6 I even scored some DX

No he's simply presuming that every aspect of amateur radio needs to deal with every aspect of theory. That is a fundamental fallacy that too often is used in an attempt to sidetrack a debate.

no it is the fallacy you just exposed a bit further assuming correctly that not every ham realy needs to know ohm's law (a statement I happen to agree with and anybody can achieve a license lacking solely a knowledge of OHM law) why does EVERY ham have to able to use ONE mode

indeed the question become quite plainly why is Morsecode MORE important than Ohm's law? it certainly is under AARS testing today

Tsk, everyone not in-line with your prissy pedantry of "exact word definition" is "mistaken." :-)

Or "in error." Or just about any other adjective set stopping short of actually USING the word "LIAR." :-)

>The Technician license does not make up 49.5% of US hams. The total of

Do all those Plusses love, honor, and obey morsemanship?

Do you have 'accurate' statistics on that? Or just the PCTA-biased 'stats' from Joe Speroni?

>In addition, many hams whose licenses say "Technician" are code tested
>and have some HF privileges.

Yes, in YOUR mind they DO love, honor, and obey morse...

So, if one strips away the Micollis massaging of morse,
the NO-CODE-TEST Technician class is STILL the LARGEST US amateur radio class. Overwhelmingly.

The MAJORITY (no shaving of fractions there) of newcomers are getting INTO US amateur radio via the NO-CODE-TEST Tech class. Just enough to barely keep the total of all licensees at the same level they were three years ago.

Attrition is keeping the EXPIRED numbers so large. Some must be quitting the ARS before their lives are over...

>btw, no US amateur radio license is "code-free". All of them can use

BY THE WAY, prissy pedant, the phrase "code-free" refers to the LICENSE TEST. TEST, Mother Superior. TEST.

I was wrong to write only two adjectives. It should be three: Prissy, PISSY pedant. You have morse code on the brain. [there might be a medical cure for that...]

>Len claims to be a "PROFESSIONAL in radio-electronics" (whatever that >is) but he messes up on the length of an antenna for a radio service he >has claimed to use.

So, you did NOT see my own acknowledgement of my typo?

Of course not. You are operating in character-assassin mode and SELECTIVELY highlight 'errors.' :-)

I've gotten money in return for services rendered. In the legal sense that means I have done "professional work." The IRS thinks so, the California Franchise Tax Board thinks so, and both have been given the proper income tax copies.

I don't "claim" anything when I've handled an R-C control box and flown a model aircraft. I simply DID it. :-) No morse code or test for same required, NO license needed!

>> The Morsemen
>Who are they?

Tsk, tsk, tsk, a worshipper at the shrine of Eniac and double-dipped EE who CAN'T FIGURE THAT OUT?!? :-)

It is all those PCTAs who do 1906 thinking in the year 2006.

One of them is YOU. Another one is the knuckle-spanking Mother Superior that you turn into when you go cross-dressing.

>I simply want to know where all those stations are supposed to come

Oh, my, ON-LINE REDEFINITIONS! Goll-eeee, Gomer, you sure NEED to win each and every argument, don't you? :-)

Tsk, tsk, tsk, the FCC privatized ALL radio operator license testing. That's not just amateur...it involves ALL RADIO SERVICES.

Hello? If you are going to MISDIRECT, at least be ACCURATE about it! That's only common sense, and a bit of fair play.

Justice.

LEGALLY, the FCC does NOT define morse code WORD RATE.

The FCC defines a lot of technical requirements in Part 97.
Yet they keep thinking the CCITT-ITU Telegram Standard will define word rate. It does not.

Tsk, you prattle on about "common sense." You haven't figured out what "morsemen" are or "morsemenship" is after over a year of use in here?!? :-)

You don't KNOW?!? :-)

Why do you care? You don't even have a license anymore. The only band

You can't even get behind the steering wheel. The state took your drivers license away 3 years ago after you hit that Monte Carlo while you were drunk on cheap liquor. That was when your wife left you also.

Ham radio will never be like citizens band. Hams have licenses and police themselves. How would you know what its like on the Ham bans.
You haven't had a license in over a year. Are you transmitting without a license. I'll have to call my buddy Riley and have him write you a letter.

If Ham Tradition were truly tradition, it wouldn't have to be coded

No, I'm not.

The FCC did away with the Technician Plus class of license. They are all Technicians now. The Technician license has no requirement for a code exam. Should a Technician wish to use what were once Technician Plus priveleges, they're on their own to show eligibility.

Welp, that's something we'll just have to live with. It's also the reason I upgraded to General.

It means they don't like it and they have to struggle through it. It means they are perfect candidates for CWGet.

The same point that you and W3RV are making when you kick around SSB vs
CW in your field day and other scores. Why is it that comparing scores is only something that you can do?

Yes, you. You!

Where do stations come from now?

Hi, hi, hi! You're just making that up.

Many, many, many amateur just aren't interested in morse code, and many, many, many amateurs just aren't interested in contests.

But if we were able to have have 100% participation and every amateur were offered a manual morse code key and a downloaded copy of CWGet....

I don't enjoy morse code.

Alternative scenario snipped.

The problem is that there isn't 100% participation in field day. It fails to meet the requirements of my scenario.

No, you vectored off when it was clear that the creation of the Conditional Class license using the "buddy-system" of testing was the original dumbing down of the ARS.

So there's a long, long tradition in the dumbing down of the amateur radio service.

If you choose to comment on somthing I say, then confine it to what I said. If you stick with that simple concept, you'll do OK.

There appears to be. The ARRL VEC and other VECs are giving el 1 exams at 13-15WPM when Part 97 says 5WPM.

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

So Stagger Lee is now someone named Stan? You seemed so sure that it was me--and Lloyd and somebody named Chason.

You didn't read the rot13 message that I left for you in the previous post. If you had, you would have realized that the isotropic power calculation was done by Lloyd Davies, and I gave him full credit for it. He values his privacy, and has requested that I use rot13 in any attribution which references one of his engineering calculations.

That explosion at your house must still be having after effects, because you seem to be confused. I'm not Dave Heil, and I'm not Stan Lawson either.

Hmmmm. Stan Lawson. Who might he be? It looks as though you might be referring to the owner of the Adolph Hitler web site at http://www.adolfhitler.ws. Why in the world would you be visiting Nazi web sites, Woger? Did those skinheads who allegedly visited you brainwash you somehow?

Miccolis can't seem to understand the LAW. No matter how often it is explained to him, he falls back on the Speroni
'definition' of 'What Technicians Are.' Of course, AH0A is a PCTA morseman of unchangeable ideas.

Miccolis also insisted that ENIAC was "the first electronic computer" because he got brainwashed by Moore School PR, being in eastern PA. Funny thing, but the LAW was decided in the early 1970s by a Federal Court trial and the Atanasof-

Berry Computer of 1939-1942 was declared "first."

Tsk. Miccolis is hell-bent on character-assassination lately.
I make a typo in a message and he makes it into a HEADLINE STORY charging some kind of ineptitude! :-)

Not only that, his Waffen SS buddie has to chime in like it is a capital offense! :-)

Tsk, Miccolis is now under Typo Alert Status, condition Red.
Each and every typo HE makes will be FEATURED INEPTITUDES of his own! Regardless of his 'explanations' of his typos, he will be charged with violations of all mankind! :-)

That's all in the sense of "justice, fair play, common sense, (etc.)" to "HELP" others. :-)

Hmmm...interesting mental picture...350 thousand radio amateurs on the few HF ham bands ALL busy 'contesting' in relatively the same time period. That would result in the Ultimate QRM that would cause meltdown of all the scores checkers... :-)

is a 'mistake.'

>So there's a long, long tradition in the dumbing down of the amateur

By all those olde-tyme morsemen REFUSING to allow modernization of the US amateur radio service in going to, and trying out NEW modes, methods, and lobbying for UPDATING the ARS regulations.

BTW, Miccolis hasn't existed since AFTER the end of WW II, let alone the creation of the FCC in 1934...but he is "knowledgeable"
by "experience" of all those old pioneers (in his heart he knows he is 'right').

Miccolis hadn't learned to read yet when the amateur SSB boom began...over two decades AFTER the commercial and military radio world had begun using SSB for long-haul HF comms. He has NO direct experience to the radio world of the 1950s except in some juvenile way. He wasn't working for a living among amateurs who were divided about the SSB issues nor was he party to some of those amateurs' (of long standing then) rather abject ignorance of basic modulation concepts. [John Carson of AT&T had published the mathematical proof in 1915, the basis of the 'phasing' concept...the rest of the radio world accepted Carson's proof and those specializing in FM adopted "Carson's Rule" on FM modulation index]

Miccolis never tuned up any SSB transmitter in the early 1950s as I had to do, never QSYed one. Not on HF and sure as hell not IN the military (he never served). Neither did he tune up or QSY any RTTY of MUX TTY transmitter on HF in that time frame. But...he "knows" all about it by reading about it in QST and the ARRL Handbook.

Miccolis is a MORSEMAN. Those of the "CW gets through when nothing else will" DUMBED-DOWN amateur persuasion. All they can conceive is switching RF off and on using morse code.
Methods that were used in the very first 'radios' of the Spark Tx and 'crystal detector' era. On-off keying of a CW carrier. Wow, real "technical" and full of smarts to bang-bang switch a carrier!

Did the ARRL ever lobby to improve regulations for the 'new' modes in the ARS? Hell, the DSSS and FHSS modes were kept hamstrung by ARS regulations into the 1990s...when the commercial and military radio services were already using DSSS and FHSS...DSSS being the major player in the commercial WLAN and 'wireless' market. RTTY is still struggling along with OLD speed limits. PSK31 was innovated by a Brit (Peter Martinez) and was trial-tested in Europe for five years before it got any publicity in US ham magazines. Non-US hams have been using PM for extremely-weak radio comms for years, on bands below the lowest allocated US ham bands;
the ARRL is finally getting around to 'requesting help' for frequencies as 'low' as a small sliver just above 500 KHz, helped get an 'experimental net' going there in this new millennium. Wow, really 'advanced technology' there,
"exploring 'long wave' comms" with "CW."

"CW gets through when nothing else will." One of the 1930s era MYTHS, born when hams were trying out DSB AM in days before WW II. "CW" does NOT 'get through' better than PM or some of the other modes, but the DUMBED-DOWN morsemen just can't understand that. They think that OOK CW is "smart!" 1906 thinking in the year 2006. Ptui.

Brian, you KNOW Miccolis will NEVER do that. He runs off at the keyboard into dozens of wild trips off the thread.
Mainly it is an attempt at MISDIRECTION so he won't have to explain his own errors, mistakes, false assumptions, and general ignorance of ALL radio, not the kind of radio that was spoon-fed to him by ARRL publications.

[Yawn...like Philly is the Center of the USA? I can't remember the floor of the FCC Field Office in the Federal Building in Chicago, IL, as it was located in 1956...other than it was upstairs...might have been the 3rd floor, but the location wasn't important. Several being examined for Radiotelegraph licenses were audible QRM in the same room when I took my Radiotelephone written test (lots of Great Lakes shipping used

"CW" then) The Chicago FCC office didn't need "lots of room for equipment"...one paper-tape code reproducer was good enough and the jacks for various keys didn't take up much space. Tables and chairs for examinees was standard government-issue stuff, tables too high and chairs uncushioned to make all uncomfortable]

[The Long Beach, CA, FCC Field Office of today is only slightly better. Was never there for any test (didn't need to), only to get a pile of paper for own business radio (non-amateur) cleared away. By that time the FCC was busy, busy, busy with lots of commercial radio and the new radio services and the rather explosive growth of PLMRS that was opening the "high band"]

>> > > Then add the FCC folks who revised the exams, duplicated them, and

[Apparently Miccolis thinks ALL the FCC does is to regulate amateur radio?!? He is blissfully UNaware of the fantastic growth of ALL radio services in the last half century. He still won't acknowledge the COLEM (who do privatized testing of non-amateur radio operator licenses) nor of the privatized PLMRS frequency coordinators nor of the fact of reduced paperwork and licensing of the private maritime radio users (Long Beach is at the heart of the maritime import-export top harbor and in the center of dozens of large marinas). The FCC is concerned with regulation of ALL US civil radio services, not just amateur.]

Miccolis did his misdirection thing, then attempted to impose
'lawn order' by saying HE was 'judge' over what was being discussed. Gotta love it. He's been doing that for years... and manages to get away with it. :-)

Then he gets caught and he bleats, "Show me where? Provide the posting!" He has been "hurt" or maybe "insulted" when folks disagree with him, poor guy.

"It's for newcomers' own good" is probably the morsemen's only good-enough answer. Yawn...keep on with 1906 thinking in 2006, morse code uber alles...blah, blah, blah...

>> > Yet they tell you that the exam myst be >> > 5WPM, and you've got all these VEs getting to define what that means.

>It appears to be a violation of Part 97.

It's a grey area in LEGAL terms. The WORD RATE is not specifically defined in Part 97, Title 47 C.F.R., and only "assumed." FCC's Definitions cite the old CCITT-ITU Telegram regulation as to coding and bit and length spacings. That referenced International Telegram Standard doesn't specifically define WORD RATE either.

Apparently the FCC gave the VEC Council written permission to do characters at the higher rate, keeping the 'word rate' at 5 words per minute. A problem is that this specific "permission" has NOT made it into the (radio regulation) LAW document yet. That makes it the "grey area" in legal terms since it can be argued both ways.

REAL attorneys can comment on whether or not I am "mistaken."
Miccolis hasn't been admitted to a Legal Bar Association yet and is unqualified to comment on law. But, he WILL comment on that AS IF he IS the law...("truth, justice, and the American way" spoken by SuperHam)

Happy Halloween, Brian.
